P R E F A C E .

It was unfortunate for this little Book that I was summoned away from Winchester, during the time that it was passing through the press. Partly through the great pressure of work which then came on me, and partly because I was cut off from the MSS. which I had transcribed, so that I could not myself collate them, I fear that errors may have crept into the text. It would have been far worse, but for the unwearied kindness of my friends, who looked through the rough proofs, and helped me with many valuable suggestions. I am specially indebted to my old friend, the Rev. F. T. Madge, M.A., who carefully collated for use the printed pages with the original MSS., and so has, I hope, secured the accuracy of the transcript. To my friends in the Manydown district, the Rev. R. F. Bigg-Wither, of Worting, Canon Willes, of Monk Sherborne, The Rev. G. S. Ward, of Wootton St. Laurence, and the Rev. W. Marriner, of Baughurst, my best thanks are due ; from them I have received many valuable suggestions and illustrations ; without their ungrudging help I could never have obtained an accurate statement of the facts respecting the Parishes they know so well ; and their ready sympathy, knowledge, and interest, encouraged me to persevere with my task, even when it seemed almost hopeless to think of carrying it out.

I know I have fallen far short of my aim, which was to sketch out of these ancient Rolls a full picture of village-life in southern England in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries. All I can venture to say is that I have done the best I could under the circumstances, and hope that the Hampshire Record Society will take a lenient view of my shortcomings.

The position and distribution of the various Branches of the Manor of Manydown will be best understood by the following diagram. No attempt can be made to give the dimensions or boundaries of these estates. The distances are marked in miles from Basingstoke as a centre.

THE MANOR OF MANYDOWN IN RELATION TO BASINGSTOKE.

Manydown Manor Rolls.

ABOUT a year ago, being at Basingstoke on some Church business, I was asked by Mr. R. F. Bigg-Wither, Rector of Worting, to look through a box of ancient documents and papers, which had for a long time been in the possession of his family. The first roll that I unfastened turned out to be a Computus of the Manor of Wootton St. Lawrence for the year 1338, at which date Alexander Heriard was Prior of the Cathedral Monastery of St. Swithun at Winchester. And on further examination of the contents of the little chest, I saw that it contained many more Rolls of the same Manor, which, from time immemorial, had been a part of the possessions of that Monastery. I therefore told Mr. Bigg-Wither that I was quite the wrong person to be called in to look at his MSS., because they certainly had formerly been the property of the Winchester Chapter, being part of the long and interesting series of Wootton and Manydown Rolls, still preserved among the Cathedral Archives. To this his reply was most generous. Though I assured him that the Cathedral Library could have no claim whatever on him, and that there were probably many other MSS. quite as closely connected with us, scattered up and down the country, in public libraries or in private hands; he still declared that he would present to the Dean and Chapter all which could be shown ever to have belonged to St. Swithun's, adding that he thought the Chapter likely to be safer custodians of such documents than any private owner could be.

Not long afterwards, Mr. Bigg-Wither sent me the whole of this series of Rolls, with a request that I would look through them and make him a report. This I did gladly, and both drew up a catalogue (printed in this volume), and also sent him a letter with some slight description of the series. It turned out that there were in all 131 documents, of which 18 were Compotus Rolls and 112 Court Rolls; and one (printed in this volume) a list of customary payments. Shortly after this, Mr. Bigg-Wither paid a visit to the Chapter House, and saw how the Cathedral MSS. were kept, and, satisfied with what he had seen, forwarded to me the whole of his Rolls connected with St. Swithun's, that they might be added to the existing collection in the Cathedral Archives. The consequence of this very generous act is that our series of documents relating to the great Manor of Manydown is now one of the most complete, if not the most complete, of all our groups of MSS. of the kind.

As a sort of acknowledgment of Mr. Bigg-Wither's liberality it seemed to me that a small volume on these documents and the history of this Manor might well be compiled and issued by the Hampshire Record Society. The documents offer many points of interest, especially in the light they throw on the administration of justice and the management of estates in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries.

It is not known at what time or in what way these Cathedral MSS. came into the possession of Mr. Bigg-Wither's family. Either they passed with the property when Mr. W. Wither bought it from the Parliament; or, they were among the many MSS. which were scattered after the rough visitation of the Cathedral Library by the Parliament's men in 1642 and 1646. We know that many of our documents were then transferred to other hands: and it is not unlikely that some one interested in the Wither family, seeing their name frequently mentioned in these Rolls, took them away and gave or sold them to the Lords of Wootton and Manydown. I have found on some of the MSS. in Mr. Bigg-Wither's possession a mark, which is also to be found on some of those remaining in the Cathedral Archives; this indicates that at the time the mark was made these MSS. had not been scattered, and had been arranged by some person in the seventeenth century; probably by John Chase, the zealous Chapter Clerk, who took great interest in the Archives, and had the misfortune to see both the dispersions of the Library treasures. This seems to point to the middle of the seventeenth century as the time when these documents may have been handed over to the Wither family. It is needless to linger over this matter, as we cannot get beyond conjecture in the present state of our knowledge.

In earlier days this Manor was not called Manydown, but Wottone. In the older documents the name of Manydown does not appear at all. There was, however, a Manor House there in 1338; for the roll of that date printed in this volume tells us that in this year the men of Wottone, cut, made, and carried the hay in the Manidoune "garden" for their lord; "In toto gardino de Manidoune falcando spargendo et levando, ijs." And where a "garden" was there was certainly a dwelling house: it is not improbable that by this time the Monks had already begun to lie there, though for nearly a century longer, the Manor is still Wottone, as we learn from the marginal headings of our Rolls. It is not till 1430 that we find the name of Manidoune substituted for it. Unluckily, we have no Roll extant between 1423 and 1430; so that the exact year of the change, and perhaps also the reason for it, is not to be discovered. All we can say is that in 1423 the Manor is Wottone; while in 1430 it is Manidoune. It is not improbable that the more ancient house at Wootton had by that time fallen into decay, or was otherwise less convenient and pleasant for the somewhat frequent visits of the Prior, Receiver, and other monastic authorities. The distance between the two houses must have been nearly a mile. In the middle of the fourteenth century we find that very considerable repairs were needed at the Wootton Manor house. In 1368 the Prior spent five days at it, and gave special orders for some necessary work to be done; and from the entry in the following year, 1369, we gather that the house must have been one of considerable pretensions, for the Roll tells us that in this year the glazier had been called in to mend the chapel windows. "In stipendio unius vitriarii emendandi fenestras vitreas in capella domini ex conventione facta cum Receptore, iijs. iiij. d.;"¹ and also a sum of money was expended for "unum novum altare in capella domini." The out-buildings also demanded considerable outlay; money was spent on the house between the stable and dairy, on the cow-house, and on the shed for forage; a new window was also put into the kitchen. A little before this time, in 1338, the Convent had paid a carpenter, hired for two days, to mend a certain gate leading into the "Gardinum de Wottone," which was surrounded by a stout quick-set hedge; he received three-pence a day, which is nearly as good a wage as a carpenter commands at the present time. In the Wootton Manor House the Receiver lodged twice in 1377, once in order to make an inspection of the estate, and the other time for the sake of a little hunting; and in this same year we are told that the park at Wootton was fenced in, so as to keep the wild animals, the "feræ," perhaps red deer, from straying out of it. Hence it is clear that the Manor was one of considerable pretensions; the park being a large expanse, mainly of wild woodland and open country, and the "garden" a sort of large close of meadow-land near the house. We gather from the Rolls that the "garden" at Wootton was much larger than that at Manydown; for, while the cutting, making, and carrying the hay in the "garden" at the latter place cost the Convent two shillings, at Wootton the same operation came to three shillings: these enclosures were a kind of pleasance in which tame animals might be kept, with walks in them for the delectation and exercise of those staying at the house. This "garden" seems, however, to have passed out of the use of the Convent at the end of the century; for William Aylmer, at that time Vicar of Wootton, held it at a rent of fifteen shillings, from Purification Day (2nd February) to Michaelmas, and (the document adds) in future he must pay thirty shillings a year. This considerable sum, being perhaps equal to some £20 a year of our present money, helps to show that the garden was of distinct value as cultivable ground, and of a good acreage.

There is also an entry showing the care taken for the comfort of visitors, which incidentally tells us that when the Prior was at the Manor he came in considerable state. In 1378 a carpenter was employed, "facere unam novam latrinam pro camera armigerorum domini;" and again, as late as 1392, two carpenters are set to work, "reparando et sublevando latrinam in camera domini, et gradus ad introitum ejusdem cameræ."

In the present house at Manydown, now owned by Sir Edward Bates, Bart., which retains at least the ancient ground plan, are incorporated traces of the original dwelling place, which is said by tradition to date back to the thirteenth century, though there is nothing left to show the exact period to which the earlier house belonged. One of the most remarkable of the relics of the old time is the well, which has been carried up above the middle of the first floor, so that when once raised the water could run into any of the ground floor rooms by force of gravitation. Lady Bates tells me that there is an absurd tradition to the effect that ill-behaved monks used to be punished by being condemned to draw certain quantities of water from this well. The house is built round a square courtyard, which is still called the Cheyney Court, as if it were the place where the lords of the Manor distributed their private justice. We may fairly assume from the data before us that the Prior handed over the original Manor House, hard by Wootton Church, with its "garden," to the Vicar of the parish, while he transferred himself to the more commodious quarters at Manydown. Whatever this Manor House may have been, it must have been either occupied by the Vicar or pulled down, for there is no trace of it on the careful large-scale map of 1616, which is still preserved with great care by Mr. Bigg-Wither. At any rate, the monks were undoubtedly the over-lords there before the middle of the fifteenth century, and from that time onwards the Manor not only took the new name but received very considerable addition to its size.

At first the Rolls show that the Manor of Wootton was composed of the Tithing of Wootton itself and of the Tithings of Hoddington and Hanyton. Hoddington, however, seems to have fallen out of the Manor almost immediately; it is not named in the Roll of 1327. A little later the Rolls speak of Wootton and Hanyton as two different Manors. The truth is that the grouping or severing of Manors was a matter of convenience. Thus, in this estate, Fremantle is called a Manor in one place (A.D. 1328), though in many other entries it is spoken of as a farm under the Manor of Wootton, in Hanyton Parish. In the Roll of 1338, some pasture land in Tadley is spoken of as being under the Manor; at least, the cost of cutting, making, and carrying the hay there is paid for by the Serviens of Wottone, Henry Lude; and the park there was in the hands of a Warden, who received a bushel of corn as his fee from the same person.

When the Manor was first called Manydown, it was composed of Wottone and Hanyton as the two permanent members of it, Hoddington having long dropped out; and almost directly after the change we find another important Tithing added, that of Baghurst, which appears in our Rolls for the first time in 1440, and goes on from that time to the end. We have nothing to show how Baghurst came into the hands of the Prior and Convent.

Manydown, we may safely say, was rather a group of Manors than a single Manor; and to this group at one time one "ham" or "tun," at another time another, was added or withdrawn. If Dr. Seebohm's definition of a Manor be accepted, and I know no better, it seems that while Wootton or Hanyton or Baghurst were properly Manors, Manydown itself was not. There is no proof that it fulfilled the one condition, that of being a "ham" or "tun" with a lord or thane over it: in other words, of being a village community in serfdom, with a house for the lord, and with the land of the estate divided strictly into two portions, that in domain, and that held by the villagers in villenage. There is no trace of a village community at Manydown itself; that was at Wootton. It was an obvious convenience and economy when a Corporation, such as the Convent at Winchester, which was lord of several Manors in a group, held courts and transacted business altogether at one centre, without the expense and trouble of moving from place to place, and consequently of having to take weeks over it instead of days. This was well understood, and often became a matter of arrangement. Thus, a case of the kind happened in 1462, in which year, as the first of the Baghurst Compotus Rolls tells us, 2s. 4*d.* were paid as the yearly fine of the tenants, on consideration of their being relieved from the duty of making suit at the Court at Husseborne (Hurstborne). "*De ijs. iiij*d.* de annuo fine tenentium ibidem, pro secta sua ad Curiam de Husseborne relaxata :—ita quod præsentare possint omnia dictæ Curie tangentia, dum domino placuerit, apud Manydounne*"; whence it is clear that the Baghurst people, about this time transferred to the lordship of the Prior and Convent at Manydown, were also permitted to change their place of Suit.

The physical conditions of this group of Manors are simple. Like so many estates on the chalk soil of Hampshire, there is downland above, on the higher ground, and woodland below; and this has been the prevailing characteristic from the beginning. The woods on the estate were very valuable and extensive, and have not only helped to construct the farm houses and buildings at home, but were also drawn on very largely by William of Wykeham, when he was at work reconstructing the nave of his Cathedral Church; half a century later, in 1459, three huge oaks, felled at Manydown, were sent to the Prior of St. Swithun's for the roof of the great hall of the Priory, which is still the main part of the Deanery; this entry gives the date of the construction of that fine chamber. These Manydown oaks are still to be seen in the upper rooms into which the roof of the hall has been divided. In 1392, we read that ninety-one cartloads of timber were sent from Wootton, and again in 1398, timber was sent twice for the works at the Cathedral Church. In the upper lands we find excellent and wholesome pasturage for sheep ; in the lower parts are arable fields, meadows, and a little stream at Baghurst, which in wet seasons gave no slight trouble by flooding the roadway, and even by washing away the bridges. The Manor, among other feudal burdens, had to sustain and forward guests, to entertain the lord and his friends, to fee his huntsmen and other followers. In 1364, Brother W. Skyll yng and the Prior's huntsmen cost seven shillings. The soil, without being specially fertile, was easy to till, healthy to live on, and pleasant to the eye ; the Prior and his conventual officers, with other monks of St. Swithun, often visited the Manor ; for there was supervision to be done, and there was also excellent sport to be had in woods and coppices, which was thought so well of that even royalty did not disdain it. In 1361, and again in 1393, the huntsmen of Edward III were there in force, and at other times we hear of them at Hanyton. Nor did my Lord Prior himself dislike a few days' sport in these merry woods. In 1324, Hugh le Despenser came to Hanyton with twelve horses, to await the arrival of Prior Richard of Enford, who had signified that it was his pleasure to hunt awhile in the Fremantle Park. The Prior's huntsmen were again there in 1364 and in 1392 ; there are also not a few traces in the Rolls of the poacher, that constant shadow at the sportsman's heels. In 1430, Robert Peverelle, one of a turbulent and troublesome family, "cum canibus suis intravit in parcum domini (at Manydown), et ibidem occidit unam feram nomine pryket ;" whence we learn that the "wild creatures" kept in this Manorial park were deer ; in the same year, William Clarke of Tadley came over on a less ambitious quest for rabbits, and "intravit in parcum domini sine licentia et ibidem cepit cuniculos." Though not at Manydown, still on the estate, at Baghurst, in 1517, Hugo Deane broke through "the lord's liberty and franchise of Baghurst, and entered and there laid down his nets and other implements ("posuit retes et alia machina," says the Latinist of the day, "ad capiendos fesonos et perdices"). There is also something like the trail of a poacher at Wootton; for the Tithingmen present "unum archum cum sex sagittis pretio vjd. provenientem infra libertatem domini de vago," and this suspicious article was forfeited to the Prior.

From a Chapter Book of 1686 we gather that Manydown Manor then included Upper and Lower Wootton, Ramsdell, East Oakley, (not Church Oakley) Hannington, Ebsworth, and Baghurst. So that, though we know that Baghurst was severed from the rest of the estates in 1649, when the Church lands were distributed out among the friends of the Puritan party, it is clear that it came back again after the Restoration. These places were not all separate parishes; Ramsdell was cut off from Wootton only in the year 1867; East Oakley and Ebsworth are only hamlets; Upper and Lower Wootton are geographical not civil distinctions. There is a distinct physical division between the two parts of the parish, marked by an abrupt chalk range, which dominates the London clay of the northern portion; the nature of the cultivation varies in accordance with this distinction. Wootton St. Lawrence¹ is a pleasant and prosperous village, lying about four miles W. N. W. from Basingstoke, with a population of about six hundred. Before the severance of Ramsdell in 1868 there were 922 persons in it; so that the new parish has carried off about one third of the population. It is a place of very high antiquity. In the year 940, King Eadmund gave "Wudetune"² to Eadric his thane, (as the title of the deed runs, "þis is Wudetunes boc þe Eadmund cing bocode Eadrice his þegne,"¹ "ob illius amabile obsequium ejusque placabilem fidelitatem," giving him four Mansae (= Hides) there. In this document we find a reference to the "Street," showing that some Roman road passed through Wootton, and also to a "cyrichide," i.e., a hide of land the property of the Church there. This shows that a century and a quarter before the Norman Conquest there was a Church of Wootton. This royal gift was transferred sixteen years later, in A.D. 956, by Edwy the King to Alfwold. "þis is þara iiij hida boc at Þudutune þe Eadpig cing gebocode Alfpolde on ece yrfe."² And again A.D. 958 it changes hands: "958. þis is þara landes boc æt Þudutune þe Eadgar cining gebocode Æþelricc his þegne on ecan yrfe," and now it has increased from the four hides to twenty mansae. In Domesday we find this manor under the name of "Odetone," but neither in the main portion of it, which was "de victu Monachorum," nor on the lands of Hugh de Port, is there any Church mentioned. The passages run thus:—

"Hae terrae infrascriptae sunt de Victu Monachorum Wintonensium."

IN CILLEI HUNDR.

"ODETONE tenent monachi de Episcopatu Wintoniensi. T.R.E. et modo se defendit pro xx hidis. Terra est xx carucatae. In dominio sunt ij carucatae; et xxvij villani et xiv bordarii cum xv carucatis. Ibi x servi et iv acrae prati. Silva de v porcis.

² "This is the Charter of those four hides at Wootton, which Eadric the King granted to Alfwold for an eternal inheritance."

T.R.E. valebat xv lib., et post xvi lib.; modo xx lib. Tamen reddit xxvii libras et xij solidos et vi denarios.”¹

“Ipse Hugo tenet ODETONE. Elmer et Alviet tenuerunt de rege Edwardo in alodium. Tunc et modo se defendit pro v hidis. Terra est ij carucatac. In dominio est una; et ij villani et ij bordarii cum j carucata et una acra prati. T.R.E. et post valebat l solidos; modo c solidos.”²

These twenty hides belonging to the Monastery are doubtless the twenty mansae mentioned above, which Edgar gave to his thane Æthelric “as an inheritance for ever.” We do not know when they passed out of private hands into those of the Bishop of Winchester, nor when he bestowed them on his favoured monks of St. Swithun. But the change in all probability followed the Norman Conquest.

It is possible that the church referred to in the deed of A.D. 940 had fallen down before the Domesday survey took place. When the Norman church was rebuilt and enlarged in 1864, the existing Norman arcade was taken down and put up again stone for stone. Below this work were found remains of an earlier fabric.

A hide of land was usually the indefinite quantity which sufficed to maintain one family, and it answered to

¹ “These lands within-written are for the sustenance of the Winchester monks. The Monks (of St. Swithun) hold Odetone (Wootton) of the Bishopric of Winchester. In King Edward (the Confessor’s) days and now it is assessed at twenty hides. Here are twenty ploughlands; two in domain; and twenty-seven villeins and fourteen borderers with fifteen ploughlands. Also ten serfs and four acres of meadow land. Woodland to carry five pigs. In King Edward’s day it was worth £15; afterwards £16; now £20. And yet it pays £28 12s. 6d.”

² “The land of Hugo de Port, held of the Bishop of Bayeux. Hugh himself holds Wootton. Elmer and Alviet used to hold it by alodial tenure of King Edward. Then and now it is assessed at five hides. Here are three carucates. One in domain, and two villeins and two borderers, with one ploughland and one acre of meadow. In King Edward’s day it was worth 50s.; now 100s.”

the "ploughland" or "carucate" of Domesday, i.e., it was as much land as could be ploughed with a full team of eight oxen. It was treated as the unit of assessment, and was divisible, if a double carucate, into eight yard-lands, and, if a single carucate, into four. A yard-land was the normal holding of a gebur or villanus,¹ and was usually composed of thirty acres (or from that to forty) in a number of strips, each acre, sometimes each half-acre, being separate, and these acre strips being scattered all over the open fields of the Manor. An acre strip represented a single day's work at ploughing, and was in shape always the same, viz., forty rods in length and four in breadth; this surface was divided, and is still, into four roods, and a rood is a long narrow strip, forty rods long and one broad, and is as many furrows in the ploughing as lie within the breadth of a single rod. (The term sullo or selio which occurs in these Manydown Rolls is connected with A.S. syl, and means a plough-land). The furlong (= furrow-long = Quarentina) was forty rods in length, and the original acre was made up of forty square rods laid side by side four times over, the English rod in lineal measure being $16\frac{1}{2}$ feet long.²

A virgate was a collection of strips of land, lying in the different fields of a manor, which, with a view to the exigencies of cultivation, was commonly divided into three

¹ A Gebur, or free labourer (villanus), had to fulfil certain obligations to the lord, viz., to pay Gafol, a tax usually in money and produce, at Michaelmas, and also Gafolyrth, i.e., the ploughing of a certain number of acres of the lord's land, and the sowing it with seed-corn from his own stock. For the Gebur, the parent of our Boor (cp. Ger. Bauer), see Vinogradoff, Villénage in England, p. 145.

² Thus, the normal acre in shape and quantity was thus :—

1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10	11	12	13	14	15	16	17	18	19	20	21	22	23	24	25	26	27	28	29	30	31	32	33	34	35	36	37	38	39	40

A rood is made up of 40 rods side by side=660 feet \times $16\frac{1}{2}$ feet; a rod is $16\frac{1}{2}$ feet square; and an acre is $40 \times 16\frac{1}{2}$ feet \times $4 \times 16\frac{1}{2}$ feet, or 660 feet \times 66 feet.

parts—the westfield, the eastfield, and the southfield. It was normally a bundle of thirty acre-strips (sometimes more, as many as 40); so that there were from ten to twelve acres in each field. Dr. Seebohm, whom I follow here, gives an example of a virgate composed of—

68 half-acre strips of arable land.

3 rood strips of arable.

2 doles.

1 acre of pasturage.

$3\frac{1}{2}$ acres of pasture.

$1\frac{1}{2}$ acres of meadow.

In this case the virgate was even over 40 acres in extent.

These lands on our Manor were held in villenage; the whole surface of the estate being divided into two parts, (1) the domain of the lord, and (2) the rest of the land, granted out to tenants, and held at the lord's will, on payment of fines at grant or renewal, and of divers customary services. These lands formed the original "communa" or common field of the estate, and are quite distinct from the more modern village common or green, which still survives in many parts of England. On this villenage of a Manor were (1) "villani," not very frequent in Hampshire; (2) Cotarii, who are also called Bordarii in Domesday, labourers who had each their own Cotsettle, their cottage and land going with it; and (3) the "Servi," whom our documents refer to as "Nativi."

There were on this Manor a few "libere tenentes," a class not very common in Hampshire, who held portions of the lord's domain as tenants, distinct from any holding they might have in the other part of the estate, the part held in villenage.

The normal acreage of a hide of land is put (though it varies considerably) at 120 acres; four hides formed a Knight's fee; and of this fee the Scutage tax (so called from the shield which the Knight had the right to wear) was supposed to be 40 shillings; and as each hide was made up of four virgates, each virgate was supposed to pay the sixteenth part of this 40s., i.e., 30 pence. Now as the virgate was normally reckoned at thirty acres, it follows that the basis of this taxation was a penny the acre; and the number of pence in the Scutum would agree with the number of acres assessed for its payment.¹ This, however, is found in practice to be often otherwise; as all these measures of quantity varied considerably, through difference of circumstances in different places, through ease or difficulty of cultivation, lightness or heaviness of soil, etc.

Some little time before the date at which our Rolls begin, an anonymous work entitled "Fleta" was drawn up, to assist landowners in managing their estates. It contains a most admirable and lawyerlike account of the various parts of a Manor, and of the legal knowledge required by a lord, in order to protect his rights and secure his income. In this work we have directions as to the survey of a Manor; each Manor requiring to be treated independently, because it is the territorial unit, and has courts and customs of its own. Enquiry, says "Fleta" has to be made:—

- 1.—Of castles and buildings in the domain, within and without the moat, with gardens, curtilages, dove-cotes, fish-ponds, etc. (In our case, the castles, etc., would mean the Manor House at Wootton, afterwards at Manydown.)
- 2.—Of the land in domain (in dominico).
- 3.—Of the common pasture outside the domain, and what right of pasturage the lord has thereon.
- 4.—Of parks and domain woods.

¹ See Seebohm's English Village Community, chapter ii. Professor Vinogradoff dismisses the word "Scutage" with a very few lines, as too well-known to require any discussion.

- 5.—Of woods outside the domain (in which others have common rights).
- 6.—Of pannage, herbage, honey, and other issues of forests, woods, moors, heaths, wastes.
- 7.—Of mills, fish-ponds, rivers (riparia), fisheries. (There was a molendinum venticale, or windmill, under the lord at Wootton.)
- 8.—Of pleas and perquisites of courts.
- 9.—Of Churches in the lord's advowson.
- 10.—Of Heriots, fairs, markets, tolls, day's-works (operationes), services, foreign (forinsecae) customs, gifts (exhennia).
- 11.—Of warrens, liberties, parks, coney-burrows, wardships, reliefs, and yearly fees.¹

Fleta then goes on to speak of the tenants, free or customary or "native;" then he describes the duties of the officers set over a Manor. First comes that important personage, the seneschal, or general agent for all the estates, who holds the Courts and Views of Frankpledge, and has an eye to the method and efficiency of the cultivation, and to the stock on each Manor, for which he calls on the "serviens" or "sergeant" of the Manor to help him.

Beneath the Seneschal each Manor had its own provost or "praepositus" who was the best or most capable of the husbandmen on the estate. He was to be elected by the whole body of tenants, for in this the older system was distinctly more liberal than that now in use. Our Rolls give us in the year 1485 an example of the process of election, which was double in form. First the whole tything, that is, all the tenants on the Manor, "elegerunt inter se Thomam Halle, Oliverum Parkere, Johannem Palmere, et Ricardum Hacke, ad unum illorum ad officium Praepositi eligendum, super quo idem Ricardus Hacke electus est de jure ad idem officium hoc anno exercendum.”¹ This Praepositus was responsible for the proper sequence of cultivation on the arable lands ; he was also supposed to be in all ways the representative of the holders of land in villenage, being himself a tenant. Lastly, he was overlooked by the lord’s bailiff, an officer appointed by the lord himself ; and the bailiff, if he fulfils his duty, is on watch early and late to see that the ploughing, sowing, reaping, and ingathering are duly done. Fleta adds, “He shall rise early and have the ploughs yoked, and then walk in the fields to see that all is right, and note if the men be idle, or if they knock off work before the day’s task of labour is fully done. Then, when sowing-time comes, he, the Provost and the ‘messor’ (who appears to be one of the tenants handiest with the scythe), are to go with the ploughs all day long.”

Such was in outline the character of a Manor’s administration, so far as the domain went : when not doing their customary services there, the tenants were graciously allowed to till their own land and to do their best with it. That this supervision was incessant, unyielding, minute, is shown by the presentments of our Court Rolls, in which the tenants are pulled up for every kind of transgression. So many are the fines for misconduct that one might believe that every person on the estate was amerced from time to time, and that the action of the Courts was in fact nothing but a concealed form of taxation. Thus, on the Court Roll for Martinmas 1365 (that is, for a half-year only), there are the following cases in Wootton alone :—Seven tenants were convicted of having pigs in their lord’s crops, one let his horse run in the growing corn, two had cattle among the peas, four had cattle on the lord's pasture, two, cattle in his oats, three had made default in rent or service, four were convicted of hue and cry and assault, nine broke the assize of beer, two had failed to repair their houses or buildings. In all there were thirty-four of them in trouble. And when one remembers that in the survey given above there were only twenty-seven villani, fourteen cotters, and ten slaves on the monks' estate, in all fifty-one heads of families, and that the population had not grown very much in the interval, it would seem as if in this half-year well nigh half the grown men and women of the parish had been fined. So girdled round with a net of feudal offences were the poor unfree folk of merry England that hardly any escaped. It is curious to see the Vicar of Wootton himself from time to time under sentence. In 1365 John of Merlawe, the Vicar, seems to have cheated my lord Prior of two bushels of wheat and nine pence in money; he was also defendant in a lawsuit with the Convent that same year for having failed to pay for the pannage of his pigs. And in 1380 William Aylmer, the Vicar, was summoned to appear at the next court as defendant, being charged with having detained the cattle of Stephen Kyng. In 1415 William Langeton, late Vicar, seems to have slipped through their fingers, for John Lloyd and Richard Dyker are amerced because they could not produce him when he was summoned to account for one bed, two brazen platters, one stove, and divers other utensils, of the value of thirty shillings; also for a horse and saddle, valued at ten shillings. It looks as if the Vicar's way of resigning his cure had been by riding off with these valuables belonging to his vicarage house. In 1483 the tithing presents that John Everarde, the Vicar, had dug up the soil of his lord (breaking up pasturage, no doubt), in "quodam clauso vocato Burygardyne, ad dampnum domini et grave nocumentum," and had dug there a well, which he was ordered to fill up again, under penalty of six shillings and eight pence. Drinking-water was difficult to get, and rather deep wells had to be sunk for it. We read in one Compotus Roll that a new rope had to be bought, and that it had cost two shillings, so that it must have been one of a great length. It seems hard on the poor Vicar that the Convent should thus check his natural attempt to come by a good supply of fresh water. But the Vicar of Wootton and his feudal lord the Rector (i.e., the Prior and Convent of St. Swithun) were not always on very good terms. In 1365 John of Merlawe (not the Prior but the Vicar) was a tiresome person; he did not pay his pannage fee for twelve years, and must have been a bit of a Radical, too, for he let three "servientes" of the Priory go free "extra servitium domini," which was a terrible offence, rendering him and the "nativi"¹ thus irregularly enfranchised liable to very serious penalties. There are also other indications of somewhat unfriendly relations between them.

The history of the creation of this vicarage is given us in the Episcopal Registers of John of Pontoise. We have seen that in Domesday Odetone was "de victu Monachorum

¹ As the Nativi are here mentioned, it will be well to quote Professor Vinogradoff's account of them. Their position and relations varied in different times and places, but it is clear that they were always the most close bound of all the holders of land under a feudal law. "It implies (sc. villanus) personal subjection. The term nativus has a similar sense. But the relation between it and villanus is not constant; sometimes villanus marks the genus, nativus the species; sometimes they are used interchangeably; the feminine for villein is nieve (nativa). But while villanus is made to appear both in a wide and in a restricted sense, and so cannot be used as a special qualification, nativus has only the restricted sense suggesting status. . . . Nativus is the personally unfree . . . the primary meaning is that a person has been born in the power of the lord, as opposed to the outsider (forinsecus, extraneus)."—Vinogradoff, Villenage in England, pp. 142, 143. In our Rolls it is clear that, as the "villanus" is rarely if ever mentioned, "nativus" was the term for all unfree land-holders. I have not found any explanation or illustration of the "terra nativorum" once mentioned: it may have been simply the common land of the village.

Wyntoniensium." Later on, in 1243, when Pope Innocent IV confirmed the liberties of the Cathedral Monastery, he included in them the Churches of Wootton and Hanyton, coupling them together as one estate; and seeming (by what authority?) to regrant them to the Prior and Convent for the buildings and repairs and sustentation both of the Cathedral Church and of the Monastery attached to it. Though it sometimes looks as if Wootton Manor had been one of those pertaining specially to the Prior of St. Swithun's himself there is ample proof that it was really granted to the corporation of the Convent for the buildings.

The deeds, as will be seen, relate to the Manor and its several portions, and to the advowson and rectorial tithes and other profits of the Parish Church. These must be kept carefully distinct, especially as there was a constant tendency in England to confuse the idea of the township with that of the parish. Of this, says Bishop Stubbs in his Constitutional History, "a curious instance may be found in the defensive war of 1138, when the parish Priests with their parishioners assembled, and joined the army of the barons,"¹ an incident which foreshadowed the way in which the parish with its ecclesiastical machinery of the vestry, etc., was about to supplant the original township with its lay apparatus of local government. The village in the earlier stages was equivalent to the whole community of free and kindred cultivators of the soil; as, however, the township fell into an ecclesiastical form as the parish, i.e., the district assigned to a Church or Priest, having, as a rule, identical boundaries and common interests, and as the Priest would naturally be the person of greatest cultivation and knowledge, supported by the lord of the Manor, and not unfrequently being Rector himself, and so far in a position analogous to that of the lord, he gradually came to be looked on as the head man of the village, and the organisation, of which he was the chief, took the place of the lay form of government. The township, however, long retained the right of meeting, and of exercising some kind of judicial authority ; this, however, rather as the survival of the early English gemot than as the court of the feudal period. The village in northern England had its bye-law, the law of the bye or town (for By is the Scandinavian equivalent of the Anglo Saxon Tun), and, similarly, the village in southern England had, though in somewhat shadowy form, what we may call its "tun-law," the jurisdiction of the simplest form of civil organisation in the land. England, when, as Mr. Green says,¹ she "settled down on British soil, with her own language, laws, complete social fabric, system of village life and village culture, township, and hundred," gave this institution of local self-government to the people of the land. By slow degrees it was taken from the people, partly by the all-pervading organisation of the Church, partly by the evergrowing influence of the feudal nobles over the land—a different thing from their political power—until at last village life seemed almost extinct, and, in the phenomenal growth and energy of urban life, almost forgotten. The English people have now the chance restored to them of resuming a large part of their original rights as freemen in their villages, and this year, 1894, will see how far they are minded to undertake again, after lapse of many centuries, the control of their own local affairs. The village meeting in old days elected its own officers, probably a geref, or chairman and spokesman, and a bydel, the parish beadle, who so short a time ago was visible to the eyes of the older men among us, and is still alive, as drawn by the observant pen of Charles Dickens. We have seen above (from the Roll of 1485)

how such an election in double form was carried on (see pp. 16, 17).

To come more closely to the story of the village of Wootton, it will be well now to produce the interesting series of documents preserved in the Register of Bishop John of Pontoise, which give us a complete picture of the way in which a Monastery could get possession of a valuable Rectory, leaving the spiritual duties of the parish to be performed by a very ill-paid Vicar. Down to the year 1299 Wootton was a Rectory, and the patronage of it appears to have been in the Bishop of Winchester's hands; in that year John of Pontoise made it a present to the Prior and Convent of St. Swithun, in order to assist that body in the repairs and restoration of the great Cathedral Church, and of the large Conventual buildings which lay under its lee. From that time onward the parish was served by Vicars only.

A few years before this took place, we have in the Episcopal Register (Pontoise, f. 71 r.) a document describing the difficulty, and the law suit following, which arose out of the claims on Wootton Tithes by the Prior and Convent of Sherborne St. Mary ~~in Dorset~~, a Benedictine House, and the last Rector of the parish. The Sherborne Monks had laid claim to the Rectorial tithes from certain lands and holdings in the Manor; this, Ralph of Stanford the Rector resisted, declaring that the tithes belonged to him. In the vacancy of the See of Winchester, which took place at this time, the case was carried up to the Archbishop's Court, and, after due hearing, was there decided once for all; the parties apparently acquiescing in the judgment. The time of this transaction can be gathered from the concurrences of the following data: first, Ralph of Stanford was the last Rector of Wootton, who, as we see from the documents below, resigned that Rectory in 1299; next, as the suit was carried to Canterbury in consequence of the vacancy at Winchester, the year of it must be either 1268, before the accession of Bishop Nicholas, or 1280, 1281, when Nicholas of Ely was dead, and John of Pontoise not yet enthroned; and lastly the Archbishop of Canterbury, before whom it was taken, is named J., and, during this period, John Peckham was Archbishop, and no other primate whose Christian name began with J. ruled over the Southern Province. His tenure of the archiepiscopal throne ran from 1279 to 1292; so that the earlier date is excluded. We are accordingly able to fix the date of this document as having been written soon after the enthronement of Bishop John of Pontoise, and probably in 1282, or early in 1283.

The letter of Bishop John runs as follows:—

Universis sanctæ Matris ecclesiæ [filiis] ad quos præsens scriptum pervenerit, J. miseratione divina Wintoniensis episcopus salutem in Domino. Cum venerabilis Pater Dominus J. TRANSLATION.

To all sons of Holy Mother Church to whom this writing may come, John, by divine mercy Bishop of Winchester, sends greeting in the Lord. Seeing that my Lord J., Archbishop of Canterbury and Primate of all England, in exercise of his authority as Visitor in the Bishopric and Diocese of Winchester, which has for a long period lain vacant, on a question of tithes from the lands and tenements of Henry of Waterford, John Clerk, John Balrichare, Anastasia, Hugh de la Putte, Geoffrey Somerfoghel, Peter Notekin, Nicholas le Man, Herbert of Wottone, Robert Acharde of Worting le Franceys, Hugh at Berche, James Ancel, Adam le Engles, Hugh at Stanecrofte, John Trocurator (?), Felicia Ancel, and Fabian of Herdely, hath cited to judgment before himself and certain his Commissaries the Prior and Convent of Sherborne, who had been accustomed to receive these tithes, and Ralph of Stanford, Rector of Wottone, who claimed them as belonging in common law to his Church; and seeing that these two parties for some time argued the case before him in person and before his Commissaries; and seeing that by reason of certain grievances the said Prior and Convent appealed to the Apostolical See at Rome, and obtained leave from the Pope to appeal; and seeing that the appeal between the Prior and Convent and the Rector made slow progress,—at length, after diverse enquiries and arguments on either side, the said Prior and Convent of the one part and the Rector of the other, appearing in due form before us, fully and expressly renounced their quarrels and appeals, and, by the arbitration of my Lord John St. John, patron of the Monks, willingly, and from top to toe, submitted to our arrangement of the Church of Wottone, and our decision on the said tithes;—thereupon, we, desiring of our pastoral care to guard both parties from injustice, and paying attention to their several rights, have called in legal advice, and have decided to ordain as follows:—In God's Name, Amen. We, John, etc., in the matter of the aforesaid tithes claimed by the Rector of Wottone from the Monks of Sherborne, ordain between the parties that the Rector of Wottone and his successors shall in future receive in peace the tithes, greater and lesser, arising from the lands and holdings of John Clerk, John Balrichare, Anastasia, Hugh de la Putte, Geoffrey Somerfoghel, Peter Notekin, Nicolas le Man, Herbert of Wottone, Robert Achard, Fabian of Yerdely, as well as from the holding of William Bernard, which tithes, the Prior and Convent have in times past received; and we declare that these tithes belong in common law to him and his Church, and we so decide finally; and as to this decision we impose eternal silence on the Monks in question. Moreover we decide that the said Prior and Convent of Sherborne shall in peace hereafter (as heretofore) enjoy the greater and lesser tithes of the lands and holdings of Henry of Waterford in the domain of Wodegarston; and of the lands and holdings of Robert le Franceys, Hugh at Berche, James Ancel, Adam le Engles, Hugh Stancrofte, John Trocurator and Felicia Ancel;—and also that the said monks shall be for ever free from all claim or exaction from the Rector or his successors, in the matter of the tithes arising from the lands and holdings of the aforesaid Henry, Robert, James, Adam, Hugh, John, and Felicia; and as to this we impose on the Rector and his successors eternal silence. And this ordinance and definition or division the parties have approved, and have taken their oaths faithfully to observe the same. In testimony etc.—we have set to our Seal—etc.

Thus it will be seen that at first the Sherborne Monks appealed, as was often done by Monasteries, to their natural friend and ally the Pope; but, as the delay was long, after much legal and other skirmishing and fighting the two parties, the Rector and the Convent, appeared before Bishop John, and declared themselves ready to submit to the episcopal judgment, the Monks having Lord John St. John their patron to mediate on their behalf, and the Bishop himself being patron of the Rectory. Thereupon the Bishop passed judgment, leaving to each litigant such part of the tithes as he thought right, and the case ended to the satisfaction of both parties.

There is another document of the same period in Bishop

John's Register (f. 67, verso) which seems to be a reference to uncertainties as to the Rector's rights to tithe; he had been resisted by some of the tithe-payers, probably on the ground that they might be called on to pay again to the Prior and Convent of Sherborne; perhaps also because they hoped that between the two litigants they might escape payment altogether.

Admonition against those who would impede the Rectors of Wootton from collecting the tithes of their Church.

J. etc., to the Dean of Basingstoke, greeting, etc.

As we have learnt by the report of certain trustworthy persons that some satellites and followers of the old

Enemy of man, having no fear of God before their eyes, have molested, disquieted, and disturbed the Rectors of Wootton in your Deanery, so that they could not levy the tithes due and wont to be paid to them and to their church, to the peril of their souls and the scandal of their church, whereby they have fallen damnably into the sentence of the Greater Excommunication, passed in the Council of Exeter; and lest that which has been provided for the good of souls should be withdrawn of malice prepense, we hereby enjoin and order you under penalty of ecclesiastical distraint, gravely, publicly, and solemnly to announce and denounce all such malefactors as excommunicated; inquiring nevertheless as to their names; and peremptorily and personally citing all the guilty to appear before . . Our Official or his Commissary, in the Great Church of Winchester, on the third lawful day after St. Matthew's Day, to receive lawful and reasonable penalties according to their deserts; and we order you to take care that the execution of this our Mandate be signified to us on the said day and place, by letter reciting the whole series of these orders. Given at Esher, Sept. 9th, 1283, in the second year of our consecration.

The language here used is fairly strong, even for a medieval Bishop, especially when one remembers that the misconduct of the tithe-payers of Wootton was not spiritual but purely temporal. It does seem as if the temporalities of the Church had too great a power to stir up violent language from dignitaries ; who, by their unmeasured speech, lead the puzzled onlookers to think that the ecclesiastic is more sensitive about the loss of the body than the loss of the soul ; and that his anxiety is greater for his temporal than for his spiritual power.

It is possible that Bishop John may have thought, after this time of confusion and difficulty at Wootton, that it might be better, if for the future the temporalities, about which there had been such a disturbance, were placed in the hands of an ecclesiastical body, equal to the Sherborne Monks in power and influence, and the spiritualities of the poor parish entrusted to St. Swithun's. Anyhow, at the close of the century he decided to hand over the Rectorial income of the parish to the Cathedral Convent. This is made clear by the Bishop's letter to the Prior and Convent, the next document here printed from the Cathedral Records (II, 22, 19).

The letter runs as follows ; and as there is also a copy of it in Bishop John's Register, which has some slight variations, the Register readings are given below :—

Universis præsentis literas visuris vel audituris J. permissione divina Wyntoniensis Episcopus salutem in Domino sempiternam. [Quum] de paterna sollicitudine omnibus ecclesiis nobis subjectis teneamur astricti, Ecclesiæ tamen seu templo¹ nostro Wyntoniensi, quæ sicut membra nobis ut capiti uniuntur, ut unum corpus in Domino faciamus, specialis dilectionis prærogativa in caritatis visceribus copulamur: Compatientes igitur dilectorum filiorum . . . TRANSLATION.

To all, etc., John, by divine favour, etc. As in our fatherly care we are bound to all the Churches subject to us, they being as members joined to us as their head, that we may make one body in Christ, and are united with them in the bowels of charity by the guidance of a special affection, we, therefore, pitying the struggles and difficulties which you, our beloved sons, the Prior and Convent of St. Swithun's, have hitherto borne, and desiring of our paternal devotion to relieve you where we can, do hereby, for ourselves and our successors, affectionately grant and concede to you the right of patronage which we possess in the Church of Wootton, and the other rights pertaining to that Church. In witness whereof our Seal is affixed to these presents. Given at Marwell . . . May, 1299, in the seventeenth year of our consecration.

Contemporary, or nearly so, with the above letter, is a document which I have drawn from the Episcopal Register of John of Pontoise (Register f. 18 verso). It shows the manner in which the Bishop, while handing the Rectorial proceeds over to the Monastery, provided for the establishment, and narrow, if sufficient, sustentation of a "poor parson of a toune," or Vicar.

² These frequent and disastrous changes of Prior were largely due to the troubles of the bad reign of Henry of Winchester. The List of Priors shows how very unstable things were in the Cathedral Monastery. At the beginning of the thirteenth century, Robert Fitzhenry was Prior. On his promotion to Burton in 1214 Roger the Norman succeeded ; after him came Walter II, who died 1239 ; then the King's man, Andrew, thrust in on the monks ; then Walter III, deposed 1247 ; then John of Caux, a worldly person, promoted accordingly in 1249 ; then William of Taunton till 1256 ; then Andrew II ; but, in 1259, Ralph Russell was Prior, who died in 1265 ; then Valentine till 1276 ; then John III (of Dureville) till 1278 ; then Adam of Farnham till 1284 ; then William II (of Basing) who died the same year ; then William III (of Basing) who died 1295 ; lastly, Henry of Woodlock, who outlived the century. So that there were in all fifteen Priors in the time, and some of them uncommonly bad ones.

Letter of Appropriation of the Church of Wootton, granted by the Bishop to the Prior and Convent of St.
Swithun.

“John etc. to brother Henry,
Prior of St. Swithun, etc., at Winchester, and the Convent, greeting, etc.
To Monks, who despise the tossing waves of the world, and turn their backs on its vanities, and choose to serve Almighty God, some things are sometimes by favour of religion freely granted, which are usually refused to others. It has been intimated to us, that though long ago good Bishop Henry [of Blois] Bishop of Winchester, granted you certain churches for your special use, and assigned them to be enjoyed by you for ever, for certain ministries in the Church of God which needed strengthening, as we have carefully read in the said Bishop's letters patent, sealed with his seal, and in letters apostolical, and the same confirmed by my Lord the Pope, and have seen that they are therein contained ; considering however that you and your House, thanks to the shocks of litigation, and frequent changes of your Priors, and to diverse oppressions, your church rents and possessions have been reduced exceedingly, to the loss of a large portion of your sustenance, as we have learnt from credible witnesses and by our personal inspection ; seeing also that the buildings of your Church begun long ago by Bishop Henry cannot be completed by you without great help from me, and that the Lights before your high Altar (for which certain Churches which you formerly held for your own uses had been assigned) are not kept up, on the ground of this loss ; seeing also that the poor and wayfarers are not taken in by you as is proper, through failure of your means ; and looking all the more favourably on you and your house, because you are under our patronage, and feeling for you with all fatherly affection, and seeing after diligent investigation that your means are insufficient to do and sustain the aforementioned duties :—we therefore devote, assign and grant you hereby the Church of Wootton, whereof you already possess the patronage, with all its rights, appurtenances, and fee customs, (on the death or resignation of the present Rector) to be used by you freely for ever to help in the repairs and sustentation above named. Reserving to ourselves and our successors the power of arranging for and charging on the Rector a perpetual Vicarage in the said Church of Wootton out of the revenues, up to the value of twelve marks sterling, for the support of the Vicar for the time being to be admitted and instituted canonically therein by us or our successors, on your presentation ; and this Vicar when appointed shall bear all temporal and Archidiaconal burdens, and [see to] all defects of this Church, which the Rector or Vicar is bound to repair. We also desire and hereby of special favour grant you, that on the death or resignation of the present Rector, you may be able to have free ingress and peaceful possession, etc. Dated from Marwell, 26th April, 1299, and the 17th year of our consecration.

On the same day on which the above letter of appropriation of the Rectory of Wootton was sealed, the Bishop caused another letter to be written binding himself, and in case of his death, his heirs and executors, to carry out the promise so made. It runs as follows :—(Pontissara, Register p. 193 recto.)

Littera qua Dominus Episcopus Wyntoniensis ligatur . . . Priori et Conventui Wynton. super appropriatione de Wottone facienda, etc.

Omnibus Christi fidelibus ad quorum notitiam præsentēs litteræ pervenerint J. Dei gratia etc. salutem in Domino. Noverit Universitas vesvolentes permittimus bona fide quod opem et operam modis omnibus quibus possumus ad ipsius appropriationis confirmationem a summo Pontifice impetrandam nos obligamus; quod si contingat dictam confirmationem nobis superstitibus, quod absit, non impetrari, volumus et concedimus quod executores nostri illam confirmationem sumptibus nostris impetrare teneantur. Ad quod faciendum eosdem obligamus per præsentes. Et si necesse fuerit, volumus quod ad hæc per censuram ecclesiasticam compellantur. In cujus rei etc. Datum apud Wolvesey vj Kal. Maii, A.D. 1299, consecrationis nostræ xvij^o.

A Letter whereby my Lord Bishop of Winchester is bound to — Prior and the Convent of Winchester to make the appropriation of Wottone etc.

To all faithful people etc., John etc., greeting in the Lord. Know all of you that since, for reasons more clearly set out elsewhere, and by reason of our affection for them we have assigned to the Prior and Convent of our Cathedral Church at Winchester the Church of Wootton for their own uses. We desiring, of our fatherly affection, to help them still further, in good faith allow ourselves to be bound to give all help and work we can to obtain for them the confirmation of this appropriation from the Pope; and if (which heaven forbid) this confirmation should not be secured in our lifetime, we wish and allow that our executors be bound to carry through this confirmation at our expense. To the which we hereby bind them. And, if it should be necessary, we wish them to be compelled hereto by Ecclesiastical censure. Wherefore, etc. Dated from Wolvesey, 26 April, 1299, and the 17th of our consecration.

And on their part, just one day before, the Prior and Convent, in return for these great favours from their Bishop bound themselves to sing two masses a day for ever for the good of the souls of Bishop Nicholas (Ely) and of Bishop John. It is interesting to note the terms in which Bishop John is referred to. He was living; so that so long as he lived it should be a mass of the Holy Spirit, that the divine life in him might be ever quickened and strengthened; and after his decease it was to be turned into a mass for his soul. The bond is to be found in the Register of Bishop John, f. 19 r.

² Cujus cor etc.—The Cathedral still keeps this relic. Where it was originally buried is unknown; but when Bishop Fox rearranged the remains of the great men who had been interred within the Church, by placing them in the low walls of his Presbytery Screen, or in the beautiful Italian chests which stand on that screen, he found a resting place for the heart of Bishop Nicholas in the wall of the third bay on the South side. He noted the fact by having this inscription cut just above:—INTUS EST COR NICOLAI OLIM WINTON EPISCOPI CUJUS CORPVS EST APVD WAVERLEI. In laying the foundations for the new Altar-Tomb for the bones of Bishop Courtenay, which we had then lately discovered in the easternmost crypt in a leaden coffin, it was necessary to enquire into some hollow places, which might possibly endanger the stability of the new work; and in doing this we came on a square plate of lead with the same inscription as appears above, only of a much older lettering, and underneath it in a round leaden case, about the size of a hat-box, was a pewter vessel, wrapped up carefully in a piece of rich golden yellow silk, which contained the heart. The relic was left undisturbed, and was replaced, where it had been put by Bishop Fox.

Letter obliging the Prior and Convent of St. Swithun Winchester to sing two Masses for ever, and to show forth other works of Charity for the souls of Bishops Nicholas and John.

To all, etc., Brother Henry, Prior, etc., and the Convent, send eternal greeting in the Lord. Be it known to you all that we with one consent, for ourselves and our successors, grant that daily for ever two Masses should be sung in our Monastery by two of our Monks whose names are in due daily order on the Table, at the middle of the Altar of St. John the Evangelist in the spot called Ad Apostolos ; the one Mass specially for the soul of Nicholas of Ely, late Bishop here, whose heart is buried in this Monastery, and the other a Mass of the Holy Spirit, especially for John [of Pontoise] now Bishop, so long as he lives ; and for his soul when it has befallen him after the manner of men a Mass for the dead shall be sung daily for ever ; and also yearly on his obit day, or anniversary, we will celebrate a Mass with all solemnity with the trumpet, in commemoration of the benefits granted us by him, and specially for the appropriation of Wootton Church. We also grant that yearly for ever on the 12th of February we will bring forth to the Convent by the hands of Sacrist and Almoner five marks of specie to be divided into equal portions for each Monk, and distributed as a recompense for the heavy toil of those who have daily celebrated and ministered therein for the soul of Bishop Nicholas. We will also bring forth to the Convent on the same day by the aforesaid hands a pittance of 20s., and to the poor at the Priory gate bread to the value of 20s. for the soul of Bishop Nicholas : And these five marks to buy spices, and 20s. as pittance, and other 20s. for alms, we unanimously agree shall be paid yearly for ever out of our common goods, and specially out of the rents and payments of our Manor of Wootton, and also from the fruits of the Church appropriated to us in whose-soever hand it may be, at the feast of the Nativity of St. John Baptist, and that this may be done we assign the said Manor and Church, in return for the benefits conferred on us in his life time, for the 100 marks bequeathed to us specially by Bishop Nicholas, which his executors have paid us, and for a good Bible belonging to the said Bishop in two volumes well illuminated, which his executors have handed over to us. And for the faithful performance of the above (so far as is possible) for ever, we bind ourselves and our successors, hereby submitting ourselves and our successors in the above to the punishment of the Bishop or his Official, that they may, holding the temporalities of the greater and indeed of all the ministrations of our Church, coerce us by every kind of ecclesiastical censure.

And should it befall (Heaven forbid!) that the Bishop or his official were remiss or neglectful in this matter, we submit ourselves and our successors, in such form as is allowed, to the jurisdiction of my Lord the Official of the Court of Canterbury for the time being, that he, if need be, may compel us by like censure to observe all things afore-mentioned and to satisfy whatever has been wrongly taken (Heaven forbid!) or even forgotten, for which, etc. Given in our Chapter House, 27th April, 1299.

In this remarkable bond, which is chiefly drawn from the gratitude of the Convent for the gift of the rectorial tithes of Wootton, we have the true history of the celebrated Vulgate, which the Cathedral Library regards as its most priceless treasure. This MS., now bound in three volumes, was in two volumes till about half a century ago, when the ancient binding (with any notes or dates which may have been written on the fly-leaves at either end) was apparently thrown away as useless. It was most unfortunate that the change (caused no doubt by the great weight and cumbrousness of the book) was permitted. There is current a pretty tale about this MS., how that Henry II borrowed it of the Convent of St. Swithun, where it had been written and "well glossed," or illuminated and annotated, by the skilful Monks in the Scriptorium; how that the King had a brilliant idea, and made a present of it to the Monastery at Witham; how some monk of St. Swithun's, travelling on Conventual business in Somerset, went to Witham for rest and hospitality, saw the treasure, and recognised it at once as the missing Winchester MS., and how in the end the Monks of Witham honestly restored it to its home. It is a tale which would have redounded greatly to the credit of the Witham community, had it only been true: the above record is however fatal to it. This fine Bible had been the property of Bishop Nicholas, and was given for the first time to St. Swithun's by that prelate's executors, after his death in 1282. The story and the date assigned to the transaction (A.D. 1188) must be at once set aside as legendary. And it is also probable that the MS. was not written in the Winchester Scriptorium: the internal evidence of the work seems to point, I am told, to a foreign rather than to an English origin.

The Register of Bishop John of Pontoise (fol. 193 recto) contains another interesting reference to this MS., which shews what great value was put upon it, and how the Bishop borrowed it and used it as a show book, to amuse himself and his visitors.

Also another letter of the same Lord Bishop to the Prior and Convent for a certain Bible in two volumes well illuminated.

To all, etc., J. etc. Be it known that we have received as a loan from our beloved Sons the Prior and Convent of our Church of Winchester, a Bible in two volumes well illuminated, which formerly belonged to Bishop Nicholas of good memory, our predecessor, to be looked upon, held and had by us, for ever or for so long as it may please us. To the returning whereof if faithfully and without guile we bind ourselves hereby, and we do not restore it in our lifetime, we submit our executors and all our goods, moveable or immoveable, ecclesiastical or secular, under the coercion or distrainment of any judge, ecclesiastical or secular, whom the Prior and Convent may think fit to choose, that they may compel the said executors by distrainment of every kind to restore the said Bible to the said our sons and brethren. Wherefore, etc. Given as above.

With or without "cohercion," the great Bible found its way safely back to the Cathedral Library, where it still awaits some skilful expert in medieval writing, in illumination, in the history of costume, etc., to decide exactly to what period it rightly belongs, and whether the beautiful paintings in it (which form an almost complete illustration of the methods of the art, thanks to the unfinished condition of the latter half of the MS.) are English or Italian. It is interesting to notice the writer's doubt as to the word Biblia. Following the known usage of nations which accept a new language, with which they are but partially familiar, the Gallo-Romans, and the French in early days after them, treated many neuter-plurals as if they were feminine-singulars, and of the first declension. In this case the scribe has regarded Biblia as both.

On the resignation of the last Rector, Ralph of Stanford, who was no doubt otherwise provided for by the friendly prelate, the Prior and Convent were at once instituted as Rectors of the parish of Wootton, as is seen by the following document, Bishop John's mandate of admission, dated May 16th, 1299, that is, about ten days after the papers given above had been exchanged between the Bishop and Convent. The Monastery continued to hold this Rectory till the year 1541, when it was resumed by the Crown, and regranted to the then newly-constituted Dean and Chapter: this body enjoyed the great tithes of Wootton St. Lawrence down to the re-arrangement of Cathedral duties and revenues in 1861, when the estate was surrendered to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and retained by them. The Dean and Chapter have now no interest in Wootton except their ancient historical connexion, and the right of presentation to the Vicarage.

This institution of the Prior and Convent runs as follows (Pontissara, 19 r.):—

Institutio et admissio rioris et Conventus ad rectoriam de Wottone.	}	Johannes Dei gratia Wyntoniensis Episcopus dilectis in Christo filiis . . Priori et Conventui Sancti Swithuni

Wyntoniensis salutem gratiam et benedictionem. Ad ecclesiam de Wottone nostræ diocesis vacantem per resignationem domini Radulphi de Stanforde nuper Rectoris ejusdem, quam vobis prius appropriavimus, vos admittimus et Rectores instituimus de eadem, salva nobis potestate Vicariam ordinandi et taxandi in eadem. In cujus rei testimonium sigillum nostrum præsentibus fecimus apponi. Datum apud Suwerke xvij Kal. Junii, A.D. 1299, et consecrationis nostræ xvij^o.¹

¹ Institution and Admission of the Prior and Convent to the Rectory of Wotton.	}	"John etc., Bishop of Winchester, etc. We admit you to the Church of Wotton in our Diocese now vacant by the resignation of Ralph of Stanforde, late Rector, which we had before appropriated to you, and do institute you Rectors in the same, with reservation to ourselves of the power of appointing a Vicar and charging him on the benefice. In testimony whereof we have put our seal to these presents. Given at Southwark, 16th May, 1299, in the 17th year of our consecration."

This document was followed immediately, at the same date, by another addressed to Henry of Simplingeham, M.A., instructing him to induct the Prior and Convent in the person of their representative, Brother Roger of Entingeham. (Pontissara, 19 v.)

J. permissione divina Wyntoniensis Episcopus dilecto in Christo filio Magistro Henrico de Simplingeham, Canonico de Werewelle, salutem gratiam et benedictionem. Quum Ecclesiam de Wottone nostræ diocesis Religiosis viris Priori et Conventui Sancti Swithuni Wyntoniensis appropriavimus et in proprios usus concessimus optinendam, ac Fratrem¹ Rogerum de Entingeham² monachum de Ecclesia ac procuratorem ipsorum nomine eorundem, facta nobis prius spontanea resignatione de eadem per dictum Radulphum de Staneforde nuper Rectorem ejusdem, pilleo nostro investivimus de eadem, etiam mandamus quatenus ipsos vel procuratorem ipsorum in corporalem ejusdem Ecclesiæ possessionem vice nostra inducas, et inductos seu inductum defendas, contradictores et rebelles per censuram ecclesiasticam compescendo. Datum ut supra proximo.

Thus the Prior and Convent were put in full possession of all the rectorial rights and proceeds of the living, and, in theory, took charge also of the spiritual duties attached thereto. These, however, the Convent had no thought of fulfilling in their own persons. Brother Roger, or some other Monk, might go to Wootton to be legally inducted, as he had been invested by the Bishop's hand with his own cap, as a feudal investiture into the possessions of the benefice, but he had no notion of dwelling, or of sending another Monk to dwell, among these country people. It is clear that the conditions of their monastic vows would not have permitted this, even for a short time. The plan of sending forth the brethren, as in primitive times, two and two, or singly, to carry the gospel tidings and the ministrations of religion to the poor folk the property of the House, would never have suited them. The Monastery could not have become a centre of evangelistic activity in country places. And so, the Bishop, being responsible for the spiritual life of his flock in the villages, was obliged to take steps for the provision of teaching and ministration which the Convent did not supply from its own body ; and he therefore reserved to himself, in making the grant of the Church to St. Swithun's, the right of taxing the income of the benefice sufficiently for the support of a Vicar. This Vicar was to be appointed by the Monastery, which thus, by sacrificing a very small portion of the proceeds of the Church, was freed from its spiritual responsibilities. This was one of the main grounds of the bitterness between regulars and seculars ; one of the causes of illwill which gave force to the reform movements of the fifteenth and sixteen centuries.

We shall see from the next documents out of Bishop John's Register (f. 21 v.) how carefully the prelate guarded the interests of the poor Vicar to be appointed.

The Rev. R. F. Bigg-Wither, has among his valuable documents an interesting translation of this order of Bishop John, made with notes by some legal authority in the sixteenth century, probably when the substitution of the Dean and Chapter as Rectors in the place of the Prior and Convent had made it desirable that both parties should clearly understand the relations between the Rectors and the Vicar. It is here given, both for the sake of the translation itself and because there are some interesting legal interpretations in it. It also appears from the close of the notes subjoined to the document, that the Vicar for the time being, perhaps Reginald Haryson, who was instituted in 1548, was claiming a close of land, twenty acres in extent, lying hard by the Vicarage or Manse, and that the Rectors were objecting to his claim.

TRANSLATION OF THE ABOVE DEED.

Be it known to all men by these presents that we John by the grace of God Bishop of Winchester do ordeine and taxe the Vicaridge of Wutton of our Dioces of Winchester late appropriate to the relligious men, the Prior and Convent of St. Swithen's of Winchester, in this maner: First we will and ordeine that the Vicar of the Church of Wutton which shalbe for the time, shall have all the *residue*¹ of the saide Church of Wutton and all the small tithes, that is to say, of flex, hemp, lambes, calves, pigges, geese, hennes, woll, cheese, apples, beanes, hay, and culver-houses, orchards, and of other places which be digged with foote, and of all other things titheable except the small tithes coming of the lordes demeanes of the said religious men in the said towne of Wutton, which the said religious men are not bounde to paye to the same Vicar. And the religious men being parsons shall take yeerly the only *sheeves*² of the arable landes the which ought to pertain to them, because of the parsonage of the same Church. Likewise we will that the same Vicar shall have the mortuaries whensoever they change and xx^{ti} acres of arable lande of that yarde of lande which the parson of the said Church of Wutton in time past did holde, lieing next to the said Church of

sum. Of this e reade ver the leafe. And also the houses and Mannor places with a curtilage garden, culver-house, and their appurtenances pertaining to the said houses and mannor-place as they be nowe at the making of these presentes included. And because it is knowne that the premisses are not sufficient to the same Vicar for the supporting of the charges within written lyeing to the said Vicaridge, we will, ordeine, and decree that the Vicar of the said Church of Wutton, which shal be for the time, shall have and receive yeerly viij quarters of wheate, iiij quarters of barley, and iiij quarters of otes of the parsons of the said Church of Wutton in their graundge at Wutton at two termes of the yeere, that is to say, in the feast of Easter and the feast of St. Michael, to be faithfully devided and paied by even porcions without any abatement. And if it happen that the said religious men being parsons of the said Church, make defaulte in paiment of the said graines in any of the said termes (which God forbid), then we will and ordeine that they be bounde to pay for every such slacknes, or for every terme in which the said graine is not payde, one marke of silver to the Bishop of Winchester's Almes, which shal be for the time. And that they be compelled more streightly from daye to daye by the Official of Winchester which shal be for the time by the ecclesiasticall judgment, without any busines in the lawe, but by warning onely given before as well to the paiment of the said graine as of the said pennaltye, if it be committed. Furthermore we will ordeine and decree that the Vicar of the said Church, which shal be for the time, being content with the premisses for his porcion, shall nowe and hereafter susteine all maner ordinary charges wholy, and the Chauncell of the said Church in covering only, so that it be comely and well covered before by the said parsons. And the charges that be not ordinary, *he doth or may touch for that portion according to the reason of the premisses.*¹ In witness whereof to this my present writing I have caused my seale to be putt to. Of the whiche one parte shall remaine with the parson and thother parte shall remaine ever with the said Vicar. Dated at Winchester the vth daye of Februarye in the yeare of our lord a thousand ij hundred fourscore and nineteen.

NOTES IN MARGIN.

Altaragium is not eyther the Residue, as in the text of the Translation, nor Herbage as it is noted in the margin : But it signifieth the Oblations made at or to the Altar ; and is extended no farther. V. Innocent. c. Cu. Inter. ent. de verborum signif. Linwoode in v. Oblationes de Consuetudine.

Mansus hath many and diverse significations in Lawe. Sometimes it is taken for a convenient and competent portion for the maintenance of a man with his familie. Panor. in c. 1^o. De Censibus un. 4^o. And in this sense a great Civilian Cinacius doth expounde it in his Commentary upon the 2 Books De Jure Feudorum from whence the Canon Lawe seemeth to have receaved it : for our Auncient Civill Lawe doth not acknowledge the worde.

(Panorm. in loco citato.) Secondlie, it signifieth being spoken of Ecclesiasticall matters, The whole Dowrie of the Church : viz., the Glebe, Tithes, and all other thinges belonging : or, as some will have it, So much lande as with a Yoke of Oxen convenientlie may be manured and husbanded. So Innocent. in c. 2^o. De Censibus. So Bartol. in l. si ita

¹ In darker ink, same period.—“according to the portion which doth or shall appertaine unto him by reason of these premisses.”

Thirdlie, it signifieth a Dwellinghouse of abode, from whence it seemeth to have been called Mansus. So Balias in L. Si Plures C. de Insert.

Nowe, althoughe any of these may agree to the worde and have grounde in Lawe; Yet at all times it cannot receave them all: for, as we say, words must have their Construction according to the subject: that is as may accorde with the matter concerning which they are used.

Nowe, for the first and seconde it cannot be understoode of them. For that both before and after there is expresslie set doune: have his mayntenance both in respect of tithes and of glebe, as also of corne from the personage shall arise. So that it can neyther signifie his whole mayntenance neyther any portion of land or endowment of the Church without absurditie, seeing that both before and after they are equallie affirmed.

The it in the last signification, which (for that it G. Tomos . v. copie howses as shalbe or the like and with Curtilagium, which seemeth to be some Backe . . . burton, reekehouse (Chicken-garden, or the like, as Lindwoode in c. Sanifa de Decimis) cannot by any reasonable understanding import anythinge else than the dwelling-howse: without manifest absurditie: which the Lawe to avoide, will admitt the most straunge impropriation of words.

Concerning the Culverhouse: it seemeth indeede that there was one belonging unto him by the tearmes of the Composition: But if he will chalengne yours, he must prove that the same was so heald and inclosed at the time of the Composition made: for so the words are, Prout tempore confectionis sunt inclusa.

Likewise, if he demaunde your Close that butteth upon him, for that he must have xx^{tie} acres next the Church: He seemeth to say somewhat (for if upon Mansus he make his chalenge, he hath scarce any colour in Lawe). But first he must proove your Close to be a part of the yarde lande mentioned in the Composition; for he might have 20 acras terræ arabilis de illa virgata etc. For the neere-nesse of it will not prove it to have beene a portion thereof. For I knowe a parsonage that hath well nigh a C acres of glebe, and scarce one within a quarter of a mile. Secondlie, having xx^{tie} acres in another place in the right of his Vicarige, which have beene so held time out of minde, any reason will presume that eyther there was none nearer, or else that by some Exchange or Agreement that was accepted and acknowledged for the xx^{tie} acres duwe to the Vicar: especiallie since for the space of xl^{tie} yeare and above they have beene so held by you and your predeces-sors without any Inliciat interruption or impeachment, for that a Parson whose right is grounded and preferred in Lawe may prescribe against a Vicar is most cleare in Lawe, since that a Vicar (who hath no other right in Lawe than the tearmes of his proposition will afforde) may prescribe against a Parson or a Rector. Vide Constit. Othon. in v. C^{to}. Instit. Ercarij (in Gloss. 2^a).

The terms, then, on which the Vicar was to be appointed being thus laid down, the next document from the Register of Bishop John is the admission of the first Vicar of Wootton. (Pontissara, 22r.)

This Robert of Basing was probably a younger member of the family which took its name from Old Basing, a village five miles from Wootton: as will be seen from the List of Vicars given below on page 55, he did not continue long there, but was succeeded three years after his appointment by one Richard of Donham, who was still there in 1310, when the following letter was written by Bishop Henry of Woodlock to the Prior of St. Swithun's in consequence of the Vicar's frequent complaints that he could not get even the small pittance which was his due from the Convent's Bailiffs. (The document is to be found in Woodlock's Register, folio 129r.)

¹ Admission of a Vicar of the Church of Wootton. } J. etc. to Robert of Basing, Priest, etc. We hereby admit you to the Vicarage of Wootton in our Diocese, lately charged and ordered by us, whereunto you are presented to us by the Prior and Convent of St. Swithun's Rectors of the said Church, and do institute you perpetual Vicar in the same. Datum apud Merewelle iiij Idus Maii, 1310.¹

After this melancholy account of the bad treatment by the Convent's servants of the Vicar who had to do all the spiritual work for them at Wootton, while they swept off almost the whole of the income, and left the poor man liable to ill-treatment if he remonstrated or demanded his rights, we cannot wonder at the growing unpopularity of the monastic lordship and of the system which enabled the regular Churchmen to live at ease at Winchester, while they impoverished country livings and treated with contempt the poor secular priests who lived among the people. Bishop Henry's letter shews quite clearly what he thought of them, and that he was ready to intervene with a strong hand between the saucy officials of the Convent and the poor Sir Richard. It is the more emphatic because Henry Woodlock had long been at St. Swithun's, and must have been conversant with the whole history of the Wootton arrangement, and with the considerable improvement in their income which the Prior and Convent had obtained by the settlement of 1299.

Vicar of Wootton.

} Brother H. etc. to my beloved Son [Richard of Enford] Prior of St. Swithun of Winchester, greeting. Again and again has Richard, Vicar of Wootton in our Diocese, complained that your Bailiffs dwelling there unjustly detain and refuse to hand over to him the portion of Tithes assigned to him by reason of his Vicarage out of your demesnes, and that as often as he demands it they scoff at him to the great prejudice and grievance of the said Vicar and his Vicarage.
Wherefore we enjoin you to be so good as to command your aforesaid Bailiffs to pay and give up without delay to the said Vicar the portion of tithes and all other things due to him as Vicar from your demesnes aforesaid : acting in the matter so that the Vicar may have no occasion to return to us again for the aforesaid reason, and so that we may be under no necessity of giving him a helping hand by reason of your shortcoming. Given at Merwell, 12 May, 1310.

There is yet one more trouble connected with this Appropriation of Wootton Church. In the year 1331 (as we learn from the Cathedral Documents, Vol. I, p. 38, No. 119) Bishop John Stratford sent the monks a brief as to their right to this property, in connexion with a law suit in which they had been represented lately by their proctor John of Lecche.

As we have thus seen something of the first and second Vicars of Wootton, this will not be an unsuitable place for the introduction of the list of Vicars down to Reformation times, so far as we can compile them from the institutions in the Episcopal Registers, and, in one or two cases, from other sources.

LIST OF VICARS OF WOOTTON, HANTS,

From the first establishment of the Vicarage down to the time of the appointment of a Dean and Chapter of Winchester.

We find that in 1283 Dominus RADULPHUS DE STANEFORD was Rector, and that he resigned in 1299, when the Rectorial rights were given, as we have seen, to the Prior and Convent of St. Swithun. The Convent henceforward presented to the Vicarage, and this right has descended to the Dean and Chapter.

1398. Dominus JOHANNES RAVENESTON, Presbyter, (Wykeham's Register I, f. 290 v.) who resigned in 1409.

progress of a countryside community, with only the tiny ripples of unexciting events to stir the placid surface. As we have said, the Manor was in the hands of our Cathedral monks centuries before Bishop John gave them the Church; and there are a few deeds, telling of additions to the property made from time to time by landowners in the parish. We have also in great plenty Court Rolls and Views of Frankpledge, from which we can extract touches of life, and get some hold of the actual daily doings of the villagers. The temporal history of the village, naturally enough, does not appear in the Episcopal Registers; nor do we find anything in them which answers in the least to the interesting account of the new establishment of a Vicarage.

A few notices of gifts or transfers to the Manorial Lords may come first, as they begin at a period earlier than John of Pontoise.¹

The first of these is a deed in the Cathedral Archives (II, p. 26, No. 27), by which Johanna la Blake, in the reign of Edward I, and while the Prior's name was William (i.e. William of Basinge), makes over to the Prior and Convent, for ready money, eighteen marks of silver, all the rights over lands and holdings in Wootton Parish, which had belonged to her late husband. As the deed is dated on a Monday, March 25th, the year will be 129½.

"Universis Christi fidelibus præsens scriptum visuris vel

¹ In Bishop John's Register (f. 178 v.) we have a little note: "Item, terra quondam Adæ atte Lighe in manerio de Wuttone," and on the next folio (179 v.) "Memorandum quod Episcopus P. dedit Johanni de Twyford camerario suo tres virgatas in Manerio Hordarii apud Wuttone, quæ fuerant Adæ atte Leyghe, quas Willelmus de Denone emit de hominibus ipsius Johannis, et hæres dicti Willelmi eas tenet."

"Memorandum, that Bp. P. [Peter des Roches] gave to John of Twyford his Chamberlain three virgates in the Hordarian's Manor at Wutton, which had belonged to Adam atte Leyghe, which William of Denain bought of the said John's men, and his (William's) heir holds them."

The entry shews clearly that Wootton Manor was dedicated to the Hordarian's support, that is, to the general daily sustentation of the Monastery. It does not tell us by what right Bishop Peter granted the Hordarian's virgates to his Chamberlain.

TRANSLATION.

To all the faithful, etc., I Johanna la Blake, send greeting in the Lord. Know that I have remitted and altogether quit-claimed for self and heirs for ever to Brother William, Prior of St. Swithun's and the Convent, all my right and claim, present or possible, to all lands and holdings formerly belonging to Robert le Blake, late my husband, in Oakley and Ramsdell. Moreover, neither I nor my heirs, nor anyone in our house shall set up or assert any right to or claim over the holdings aforesaid. And for this remission and quit-claim the Prior and Convent have given me eighteen marks of silver down. In witness whereof, etc. Witnesses, etc. Given at Winchester of a Monday, being Annunciation Day, in the year of the reign of King Edward son of Henry.

It was about this same time that we gather the history of the property called "Fabyans" in the "Valores" of 1541, and reckoned as part of the Manor of Manydown. In the Cathedral MSS. (Vol. 1, p. 33, No. 107), there is a Plaint of Fabian and his wife concerning lands and part of a messuage in Church Hokele: Church Oakley is not itself reckoned among the "Membra de Manydown," and apparently was at no time in the possession of the Monastery. But John Fabian first demised his messuage and land to the Prior and Convent for a term of six years; and then at his death left a hundred acres of it to them; and in the document of 1331 (Cathedral MSS., Vol. 1, p. 38, No. 119) we have the following passage: "Item, Ecclesiam de Wotton in usus proprios, Item, decimas provenientes de C acris terræ quondam Fabiani de Yerdele apud Okle." This bequest, as we see from the 1334 Roll, was of considerable value; for while the Receiver paid the Convent £20 for the appropriation of Wootton rectory, he also paid £3. 6s. 8d. "for the rent of Oklie," a sum dedicated to the purchase of spices, that necessity in the commissariat of a medieval Convent. Thus it appears that "Fabians" was worth about one sixth as much as the whole tithe and produce of the Wootton rectory.

A generation later, Prior Hugh of Basing (A. D. 1361—1384) had a law-suit with the Fremantel of the time, and won from him a messuage, two ploughlands, ten acres of pasture and two acres in Wotton, which he thus recovered "in jus suum versus Fremantel." John Wayte, whose name occurs not infrequently in the Rolls of the time, held these acres. The deed by which Prior Hugh devises these possessions for eight years is dated on a Sunday.

In the Court Roll of 1352, Vicar John of Merlawe paid a fine of 12*d.* "pro quadam grava vocata Shothanger," which he rented from the Convent. These were the years of the great pestilence, the Black Death, the ravages of which left their mark on well nigh every parish in the realm, and the effect is shown in our Rolls very clearly, though they give us no details of the actual losses. The list of lands thrown on the Lords' hands at this time is almost equivalent to a catalogue of names of those who had perished. We can see how severe had been the mortality by the fact that the Common land, the "terra nativorum," had fallen into the hands of the Convent. "1354. In pacatis Vicario de Wottone (John of Merlawe) pro denariis beati Petri et St. Swithuni *pro terra nativorum existenti in manus Domini viij*l*. ob.*" And the very next item on the account shews that John of Merlawe himself was in some straits; for the Convent had to excuse him his payment for land, which he doubtless was quite unable to cultivate for lack of funds. "In perdono Domino Vicario de Wottone de redditu cujusdam placeæ vocatæ Adlyngtone de anno proxime præterito iiij*s*. viij*l*., per literam." In such a year the exactions of those unwelcome persons the Provisors must have been unusually oppressive. "In expensis diversorum provisorum Domini Regis, Dominæ Reginæ, Principis Walliæ, et aliorum, cum donis eisdem, xiiij*s*. viij*l*." Hugh of Basing, at that time Receiver of the Convent, must have been at his wit's end to support the monastic establishments. At the close of the Account Roll of 1354 we find the record of his difficulties and the gloomy cause of them; "Item, allocatur eidem (Hugoni) lix*s*. vd. ob. de redditu a retro existente diversis terris et tenementis existentibus in manus Domini pro defectu Tenentium causa pestilentie, quos levare non potest."¹ The hapless tenants had been swept away, and there were none to take their place. Nor did the evil end then. Six years later the land had not recovered: those tenants who survived being unable to pay their rents, so that their holdings lapsed to the Lord. This is the list of tenants in arrear in the year 1360:—

And on the back of the same little roll, attached to the foot of the Compotus of 1360, we find a record, which shews that the Prior and Convent had not hesitated to use their powers as landlords, and to enter into occupation.

Whence it appears that the Convent could not raise from the land half the amount at which the rents of the tenants had been fixed. Henry at Oakland, indeed, paid the same rent as before, and from Thomas Henry they actually got 6s. 6d. instead of 5s. 1d.; the others without exception had fallen very heavily. Again, four years later there is a similar subsidiary Roll, with more detail as to these holdings, which were still paying only half rents.

Things seem, soon after this, to have taken a turn for the better. New buildings are undertaken; a new shed or house at Sengatte for the "hogroni," and a new house near the outer gate of the Manor House court. The Manor had also to bear some heavy charges. It had a long visit in state from the Lord Prior, which cost it sixty shillings and one penny: it had also to pay the travelling expenses of the Seneschal's wife and others, who were making their way from Winchester to Caversham and Reading: and the royal huntsmen were once more on their shoulders. "In expensis 24 hominum faukenanorum Ducis Lancastriæ existentium ibidem per j diem et j noctem, iijs. vjd. Et polentarii et Venatoris Domini Regis et aliorum supervenientium per vices hoc anno, ijs. vjd.¹ This is an item which occurs again in 1381; and Brother William Skyl-lyng, who was Receiver for several years, had a liking for the place, and found the sport good. In 1383 we find that Bishop of William of Wykeham's friend, Thomas Nevyle, at that time one of the Monks of St. Swithun,² afterwards Almoner in 1389, 1390, and finally Prior from 1394 to 1414, paid the Manor a visit. "In expensis Thomæ Nevyle venientis ibidem in omnibus xijd. sine tallia. In datis (?) donis et expensis Polentariis Domini Regis hoc anno ijs. iiijd. Et in datis et expensis diversorum hominum de familia Comitis Kancie venientium ibidem hoc anno iijs. . . . Et in xij caponibus emptis pro exennio Comiti Kancie faciendo præcepto Domini Prioris, quia nulli de stauro extra, iijs."³

² "Thomas Nevyle had been ill in the Infirmary in 1382; and this visit may have been taken by him as a change of air.

³ "Spent on Thomas Nevyle who came here, in all 12d. without tally. Given to and spent on the Mealmakers of the King, this year, 2s. 1d. Given to and spent on different men of the household of the Earl of Kent who came here this year, 3s. . . . And for 12 capons bought for the gift of hospitality to the Earl of Kent, by precept from the Lord Prior, because there were none to spare in store. 3s."

We have pointed out already, in speaking of the abundance of timber on this estate, that William of Wykeham drew from Manydown some of the wood needed for his Cathedral works. Here is a passage, which shews that he was laying in large stores of timber as early as 1392. "1392. In expensis diversorum hominum cum lxxxxi carectis cariantibus mearemium de Manydowne usque Prioratum una vice ex parte Servientis et aliorum hoc anno, præcepto Receptoris xxxiij*s*. iiij*d*."¹ These ninety-one loads were probably used for the new roof over the groining of the Cathedral Nave.

Lands were still coming in to this estate. The Cathedral MSS. contain a Deed under date of 1409, in which John Gerveys and Thomas Horton devise to the Prior and Convent certain lands in Church Oakley and Wootton; these were a messuage and two ploughlands, and twenty acres of pasture, with their purtenances for the term of ninety-eight years; the Convent to make once a year at St. John Baptist's day some slight payment in acknowledgment.

Every year there are some fresh penalties and fines to be found in the Court Rolls; and of these one of the most remarkable is to be seen in the Roll of the Autumn Court of 1427, in which, in the View of Frankpledge "at Wodegarston," the Prior of Swithun's was fined 40*d*. for blocking up a horseroad or bridlepath, running between the land formerly belonging to John Fabyan and the park at Manydown. He was ordered to remove the obstruction before the next Court day, under penalty of 20*d*. It is a curious example of the way in which, even in feudal times in England, the law asserted its authority against the Lord himself. It was in fact his own Court, and it condemned him apparently without hesitation.

There was nothing as to which these Courts were so strict and particular as to the enforcement of the Assises of bread, beer, and wine. The last, of course, was not of much importance in a country place; but bread and beer were matters of daily and universal interest. The ale-conner and the bread-taster were always, it seems, moving about, and their activity is shown on the Rolls. There is scarcely a Court in the whole series which has not a case or two of "broken Assise." That of 1466 may suffice as an example: there are several instances in the Rolls printed in this volume. The standard of the Assise was not merely that of size, weight, quantity; it was also of quality. In the middle ages, at least, the specious "caveat emptor" maxim was not in use; the buyer was defended, as far as possible, from all kinds of imposition, and on the seller was laid the duty of giving the right quantity and quality up to a reasonable standard. The offences were those of baking and selling bread short weight, and of brewing and selling beer without licence. Though the Assise is gone, we still enforce the principle of it by our inspection of weights and measures, and by our laws against adulteration.

In 1466 the presentments ran thus:—"Item, præsentant quod Johannes ^{1d.} Horte est pistor et facit panem pendentem minus assisa. Item, quod Alicia Peverel. Item, præsentant quod Robertus Peverel, qui de domino tenuit unum messuagium et x acras terræ quondam Thomæ Feyful cum suis pertinentiis in Nether Wotton obiit, per mortem cujus nihil accidit Domino de Herietto, quia nullum animale habuit vivum. Et sic dictum messuagium et terræ remanent in manus domini.¹

"Also, they present that John Horte (1d.) is a baker, and makes bread weighing shorter than the Assize. Also, that Alicia Peverel (did the same). Also they present that Robert Peverel, who held from the Lord a Messuage and x acres of land which formerly were in the hands of Thomas Feyful with the appurtenances in Nether Wootton, has died, through whose decease nothing fell to the Lord as a Heriot, because he had no living animal. And so the said Messuage and lands remain in the Lord's hands."

The next paragraph in the same Court Roll gives us another instance of the turbulent characteristics of the Peverell family, which was by no means confined to the male bearers of the name. "Et ulterius præsentant quod Alicia Peverelle vidua contra pacem Domini Regis domum Henrici Shafte apud Basingstoke fregit et intravit, viz. in festo S. Thomæ Martyris Anno regni regis Edwardi IV vj^o, et ibidem unum Aproun de linea tela, pretio iiij*d.* de bonis et catallis dicti Henrici, ac unum manutergium pretio iij*d.*, et unum flanninishe pretio iiij*d.*, de bonis et catallis Henrici Norhamptone; ac etiam pisces salsos, pretio vij*d.*, de bonis et catallis Johannis Heorte, ac unam gallinam de bonis et catallis Johannis Pole, pretio ij*d.*, ibidem inventos injuste cepit et asportavit. Ideo preceptum est ipsam corporaliter attachiari contra proximam, etc.¹

Nor were the sweet rustic villages of the fifteenth century free from quarrels: there are several cases of assault and battery in these Rolls. One instance occurred in 1471 (unhappily a quarrel between two wives). One "Katerina Cotyne fecit insultum cum una virgata super Agnetam Mason"; and "Hugo Cotyne contra pacem domini fecit rescussum super Thomam Mason"; from which it appears that the husband of the beaten lady had seized Katherine, in defence of his spouse. She, however, bore no very good character; in 1498 there is an entry, "quod Isabella Poynder uxor Thomæ Poynder et Agnes Mason uxor Thomæ Mason sunt communes objurgatrices et objurgati fuerunt cum uxore Thomæ Hunte et cum uxore Henrici

¹ "And further they present that Alice Peverel, widow, against the peace of our lord the King broke into and entered the house of Henry Shafte at Basingstoke, on the Feast of St. Thomas the Martyr, in the sixth of Edw. IV (29 Dec., 1466), and there found and unjustly took and carried off one Apron of linen worth 4*d.*, of the goods and chattels of the said Henry, and one hand-towel, worth 3*d.*, and one flannel (flanninishe) worth 4*d.*, of the goods and chattels of Henry Northampton; and also salt fish worth 7*d.*, of the goods and chattels of John Heorte, and a hen of the goods and chattels of John Pole, worth 2*d.* Therefore it was ordered that she should be bodily apprehended against the next Court, etc.

Jonson et aliis diversis vicinis ibidem ad grave nocumentum totius decenniae ibidem. Ideo ipsi in misericordia."¹ There must have been a fine noise and scandal all down the village street.

The contention between St. Swithun's and Sherborne, which seemed to have been allayed early in the fourteenth century, broke out again at the very end of the fifteenth. 1497. "Johannes Redynge qui est ætatis lxxx annorum et ultra et manet apud Rammysdelle infra parochiam de Wotton ———² manebat cum Johanne Browne Ballivo prioris S. Swithuni Wyntonie et postea cum Thoma Broune firmario dicti Prioris manerii sui de Wotton xlvj annis elapsis, et in illo tempore prior Sancti Swithuni prædictus fuit seisis de decimo de Balchesterlond absque aliqua interpositione seu clamore prioris de Shyrborne ad superstitis (?) et nunquam audivit quod pertinere solet priori de Shyrborne donec nunc per quendam Thomam Carter per vij annos elapsos. Et sic testatur per Richardum Jamlefylde, qui fuit et est commorans ibidem per quinquaginta annos elapsos, et nunquam audivit contrarium usque nunc, et dicit quod Balchesterlond continet in se octodecim acras unde tres acrae in tempore decimarum (adjacentes ?) et Prior Sancti Swithuni tunc percipiet duas garbas pro decima sua et Prior de Shyrborne unam garbam pro decima prædictarum trium acrarum. Et quod Prior de Shyrborne nunquam habuit decimam ulterius, scilicet totum residuum pertinet Priori Sancti Swithuni. Et ulterius dicunt quod tenementum Willelmi Uvedale vocatum Gyllys, in quo Ricardus Fylder modo inhabitat, solebat esse infra parochiam de Wotton, et Ricardus Fletcher com-morans ibidem solvit Vicario de Wottone mortuarium pro uxore ejus et etiam solo (?) pertulere cum parochia de Wottone panem benedictum et candelam et habuit prolem — baptisatum pro triginta annis præteritis, et nunquam perantea (sic) pertinuit ecclesiæ de Wottone et nunquam Priori de Shyrborne usque nunc per testimonium prædictum.”¹ And John Palmer, who was fifty years old, said the same.

There is something wrong in the statement of the witnesses at the end. It is clear, however, that they are anxious to prove that the tithes in the main went by custom to St. Swithun’s and not to Sherborne.

As we are recording matters as they come, we may here add an example of a Corrody. For William Burnell, on coming into certain lands, “ex redditu Thomæ Mason,” viz. in Nether Wottone, pensioned off that old inhabitant in the following way. 1509. Willelmus Burnell pro uno messuagio et decem acris terræ nuper Roberti Pennell cum suis pertinentiis in Nether Wottone ex redditu Thomæ Masone pro cujus sursumredditu accidit domino

¹ 1497. John Redynge, a man of eighty and upwards, living at Rammesdelle, in the parish of Wootton, — was with John Browne, Bailiff of the Prior of St. Swithun’s, Winchester, and afterwards with Thomas Browne, farmer of the said Prior of his Manor of Wootton for forty-six years past, and in that time the said Prior was seized of the tithes of Balchesterland without any interference or claim of the Prior of Shyrborne for the remainders (?), and he never heard that it is wont to pertain to the Prior of Shyrborne till now, through one Thomas Carter there last seven years past. And so it is testified by Richard Jamblefylde, who was and is dwelling there for fifty years past, and never till now heard the contrary, and says that Balchesterland is of eighteen acres, of which three acres in time of tithes (?) and the Prior of St. Swithun will then take two sheaves for his tithe and the Prior of Shyrborne one sheaf for the tithe of the said three acres. And that the Prior of Shyrborne never had any more tithes, i.e., the whole residue belonging to the Prior of St. Swithun’s. They further say that the holding of Wm. Uvedale called Gyllys, now occupied by Richard Fylder, used to be within the parish of Wootton, and Richard Fletcher, living therein, paid to the Vicar of Wootton a mortuary fee for his wife, and also (?) carried with the parish of Wootton the blessed bread and taper, and had offspring — baptised for thirty years past, and never before did it belong to the Church of Wootton, and never to the Prior of Shyrborne up to this present time, by the testimony aforesaid.

Peverell) with its appurtenances in Nether Wootton, from the rent of Thomas Masone, for the surrender whereof there came to the Lord as a Heriott a sheep of the value of 12*℥.; as appears from a copy held by him according to the custom of the Manor, for rent and service due and accustomed therefrom. And he gives to the Lord in fine 20℥., and did fealty, etc. Pledge Rich. Eyliff. The same William, for a croft of land containing one acre, and ten acres of land lying in divers fields called Penyes with their appurtenances in Nether Wootton, formerly of John Browne, for the rent of Thomas Masone, for the surrender whereof came to the Lord as a Heriott a goose worth 6℥., which now he paid offhand, as appears in a copy holden by him, etc. And he gives the Lord in fine 20℥., excused him because he paid 12℥*. in full payment of the old rent for ever. There is one more peculiarity in these Court Rolls to which I wish to call attention. I am not able, after enquiries from the Rev. W. Dunn Macray, M.A., Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford, who is the chief authority on the Archives of that College, to explain it completely, though it is easy to make a fair guess.

In the year 1483 we find: "Præsentant" (the tithing does) "quod Willelmus Waynflete Wintoniensis Episcopus tenens terræ et tenementorum nuper Domini de Say tenentis terræ et tenementorum nuper Thomæ Grenefelde liberi sectatoris, facit defaultam; Ideo ipsi in misericordia."¹ Again, in the year 1489, we find in the Roll: "Præsentant quod ^{vjd.}Presidens Collegii S. Maria Magdalene, Oxon. ^{vjd.}Domina de Say, Decanus Collegii S. Georgii de Wyndesore pro terris nuper Grenefelde liberi sectatoris faciunt defaultum; ideo ipsi in misericordia."² This statement recurs in 1492 and 1497, as it does again in 1516. The probable history of this dogged refusal to pay is this. William of Waynflete acquired these lands, formerly belonging to Thomas Grenefelde, and held them himself (1483); then he made them a part of the endowment of his new College of St. Mary Magdalen at Oxford, and placed them in the hands of trustees, one, the first, being the President of Magdalen, the next being the Lady Say, widow no doubt of the Lord Say to whom the property had previously belonged, and the third the Dean of St. George's, Windsor (Waynflete's connection with Eton inducing him to select that dignitary): these trustees regarded the endowment as a free gift, and refused to recognise the claims of the Prior and Convent as Lords of the Manor, so that there continued, perhaps down to the Reformation, a quiet struggle and protest between these parties. In one place the lands are described as "Fynys' lands."

² "They present that the President of Magdalen, Oxford (6d.), Lady de Say (6d.), the Dean of the College of St. George of Windsor (4d.), for the lands lately of Grenefelde, freeholder, make default: therefore they are amerced."

The importance of the woodlands of the Manor was thoroughly well understood. We have seen how the Convent drew on them; and throughout the Rolls there are allusions to them. In the year 1624 the Court of the Manor ordered that William Grantham, John Poynder, John Misselbrooke, William Drewett, John Spender, and Richard Dykes, of Foxcote—it will be seen how the old names were still prominent at Wootton—should see "what timber-trees and what wood and underwood have been felled, grubbed, and carried away by any tenaunt of this Mannor, and to certifie at the next Auditt the truth what hath been done herein, and in the mean time the parties aforesaid to appoint their times for the herroeing of the said waste uppon peine of £5 evry one making default to meete at the times appointed." After the time of the Restoration, when the Dean and Chapter ejected poor Mr. William Wither, without apparently returning a penny of the purchase-money with which under the Commonwealth he had secured the Manor and Manor house of Manydown, they gave away great oaks right and left to their tenants, to be used in building and repairing the needful houses and farm buildings on the estate. And about the same time, in 1667, the Wood Book of the Chapter gives us the acreage still in woodland, namely :—

MANYDOWN.—Coppices in the hands of the Church, 1667.

Well Coppice	18 acres
Round Grove Coppice	22 "
Bottom or Worthwood Coppice	24 "
Singet Coppice	30 "

Also Coppices let to Mr. Wither :—

Cowdown Coppice	11 acres.
Pardown Coppice	8 "
Mavil Hedgerows	2 "

Total ... 115 acres

And this is set, somewhat later, at a higher figure. For in describing Mr. Wither's fine on renewal at £365, it is stated in the Chapter Book of 1730 that his land under the Dean and Chapter amounted to :—

Arable	915½ acres
Pasture	38½ "
Coppice	125 "

1079 acres

The Rev. R. F. Bigg-Wither has among his papers a survey of the Manor dated January, 1649, made in consequence of the Act "abolishing Deans, Deans and Chapters, Canons, Prebends, and other officers belonging to any Cathedral or Collegiate Church in England and Wales"; it was made with a view to the sale of this property. And in the following September Mr. William Wither, the representative of the family, which had been settled at Manydown since the time of Edward III, made an agreement with the "Contractors of the Parliament" for the purchase of the "Manor of Manydown with the Manor House and all and every the lands rights and hereditaments thereto belonging" for the sum of £6550. 14s. 4d. To this deed the whole of the Customary Tenants of the Manor gave their assent and consent, thereby transferring themselves from a spiritual corporation to a single flesh-and-blood Lord of the Manor, in a little document dated December, 1649.

After the Restoration, when all the transactions of the Republican period were treated as null and void, and the Dean and Chapter re-entered on their estates, the restored body no doubt wished not to press too hardly on those who had bought the freehold, or to eject them entirely (unless they were unpopular or puritanic, in which case it no doubt went hard with them). And so they allowed Mr. Wither, who was known to represent a most reputable county family (in spite of the escapades of Mr. George¹), to retain Manydown Manor House and the estates as their tenant, on a 21 years' lease, renewable in the usual way every seven years, at a small annual rent and a moderate fine. These fines on re-entry and renewal were gathered in by the Dean and Chapter with eminent success during the years in which they shared the popularity of the Restoration. No one dared to resist or to cry out; the Chapter had suffered heavily in the Commonwealth days, having been altogether swept away as a nest of "sweet papalists," while everything belonging to the community was either carried off and sold for the support of the Government, or given away to adherents of the triumphant cause. And so when they recovered their position and estates, it seemed to them the most natural thing in the world to repay themselves for their long starvation by making fresh bargains for all their estates; and this they did with such success,² that they were able to put the Cathedral Church, the public buildings of the Close, the Deanery, and the Canons' houses into excellent repair. The houses which dated back to a time before the Restoration were thoroughly repaired; and the other houses which had been either pulled down or allowed to ¹ To Mr. George Wither there are two references in this group of Rolls. In 1667 he was amerced in the Manor Court for transgressions.

Jasper Guest		Affirmavit	De eodem, quod arravit limites	vs.
De eodem quod similiter in Via Regia iij s. iij d.

And in 1675 we find him, for what cause is unknown, actually in prison; and so the sum of 2*s.* 6*d.* which he was then bound to pay is declared irrecoverable.

² The Chapter books give an account of the amounts collected in this way between 1660 and 1670; it came to no less than £43,465. 19*s.* 2*d.* received in fines for Leases and Copyholds. Out of this large sum the Dean and Chapter expended on the Cathedral, the rebuilding Deanery and Canons' houses, etc., £22,564. 3*s.* 5*d.*, and the remainder they distributed as dividend among themselves.

fall into ruin, were rebuilt on a larger and better scale. It is to this fund thus expended that the Close of Winchester Cathedral owes its beautiful red brick dwelling-houses, with their fine leadwork, and general appearance of comfort and solidity. The papers dealing with these transactions, which are still in the possession of the Rev. R. F. Bigg-Wither, are printed at the end of this volume.

Among the Manors which formed a part of the great group of Manydown was that of Hoddington, which is mentioned in Domesday as having been held by the Bishop for the sustentation of his monks of Winchester.

“HÆ TERRÆ INFRASCRIPΤÆ SUNT DE
VICTU MONACHORUM
WINTONIENSIIUM IN ODINGETONE HUNDREDO.

* * * *

“Ipse episcopus tenet ODINGETONE. T. R. E. se defendebat pro v hidis. Modo pro ij hidis. Terra est vj carucatæ. In dominio sunt ij carucatæ, et iij villani, et ix bordarii cum ij carucatis.

“The Bishop himself holds Odingetone. Under King Edward it was assessed at 5 hides; now at 2. Here are vi ploughlands; 2 in Domain, and 3 villeins and 9 borderers with 2 ploughlands. Under King Edward, afterwards, and now, it is worth four pounds.”

We find Hoddington mentioned as one of the Manors which Bishop John of Pontoise released to the Prior and Convent; and in the first of the Court Rolls in this volume (A. D. 1300) it appears as a Manor doing service with Wootton and Hannington to the Convent as its Lord. We can also trace it all down the Hordarian's Rolls of St. Swithun, for it was specially told off to sustain that office. The amount it paid varies considerably from year to year; in 1327 it was £11. 14s. 4d.; the highest amount (1330) is £33. 5s. 11¼d.; and then in 1335 it was £23. 0s. 5d., to the Hordarian, together with fifteen pigs to the Prior's Treasury, valued at £2. 5s. (i.e., 3s. a pig). The lowest sum paid over (if we except what seems a very doubtful entry), is the £11. 14s. 4d. mentioned above. We find it also named as one of the five Manors granted by King Henry VIII to the new Dean and Chapter in 1541, as an endowment for their twelve Students in Divinity,¹ six at Oxford and six at Cambridge, and again surrendered by the Chapter to the King in 1545, at which time the value of it is given as £14. 10s. Hence it is clear that, though it appears no longer on the Court Rolls after 1300, it still remained in the possession of the Prior and Convent, whether it was treated as an independent Manor or grouped with other properties. It lay well away from the group which was first called Wootton and then Manydown: for it is a tithing in Upton Grey parish.

Wootton also included Ramsdell, now wrongly spelt Ramsdale, which, with portions of the adjoining parishes of Tadley and Monk Sherborne, was separated and formed into a parish in 1867; and also East Oakley, which still remains in Wootton.

Another important member of the Manor is Hanyton, or, as it is now written, Hannington. Whether the modern form is a mere result of the accidents of euphony, which seems often to desire the doubling of liquids, and the strengthening of the weaker syllables, or is due to other causes, I cannot tell.²

² The "Hannington" form perhaps arises from the ancient Anglo-Saxon form, familiar to all readers of the English Chronicle; this would make the name Haning-ton, the "ton" or enclosed farm or village of the Haning, the Han family. For this, however, we have no evidence, as the "g" does not appear in any of our documents till the year 1492, when John Geage, in his Account Roll as Farmer and Rent Collector, writes it as "Hanyngton"; at the same place, in the margin, the

Be this as it may, we know that from very early times Hannington was an independent parish; for it is described in Domesday as having its own church (dedicated to All Saints).

The Domesday Survey gives it thus, among the lands "de victu Monachorum Wintoniensium"

In Clere Hundredo.

Iipse episcopus tenet Hanitune. Semper fuit in monasterio. T.R.E. se defendebat pro vij hidis: modo pro vj hidis et dimidio et ij partibus unius virgatæ. Terra est viij carucatæ. In domino sunt ij carucatæ et xvij villani et vij bordarii cum vij carucatis. Ibi ecclesia et iiij servi.

T.R.E. valebat c solidos, et post vj libras. Modo viij libras. Tamen est ad firmam pro xv libris.

"The Bishop himself holds Hanitune. It has always been in the Monastery (i.e., has always belonged to it). Under King Edward it was assessed at 7 hides; now for $6\frac{1}{2}$ hides, and two parts of a virgate. Here are 8 ploughlands, 2 in domain, and 17 villein, 7 borderers with seven ploughlands. There is a church and 4 serfs. In the king's time it was worth a hundred shillings, then six pounds, now eight pounds. Still it is at farm for fifteen pounds."

From this entry it is plain that Hannington was a very ancient parish, attached, perhaps from the introduction of the Benedictine rule, and certainly from the days of Bishop Æthelwold, to the Cathedral Monastery. The Rectory was never seized by the Monks.

At the beginning of our record of the rectors, we find the benefice given, in rapid succession, to three men who were only in Acolyte's Orders. Of these the last has leave of absence for the purposes of study at some place where there is a "studium generale," or University, and during his year of absence he is not to be compelled to proceed shorter "Haniton" is still used. The "n" is found in the dispensation to John Schorstone, the Rector, in 1306, which seems to point to the A. S. -ing.

There is another property in Hannington, described in Domesday as held by Lewin.

even to Deacon's Orders. "Memorandum quod v Id. Mart. A. 130⁵/₆ Dominus dispensavit cum Johanne Scharston Rectore de Hanyntone, quod possit studere per unum annum, nec interim compelli ad Diaconatus ei per . . . ordines suscipiendos."

And in those earlier times the rectors were frequently away from home; some of them, it is clear, were not in full orders, and could therefore not administer the Sacraments of the Church; so that they must have always wanted help, if the spiritual needs of their parish were not to be altogether neglected. In 1322 John of Westmancote had a year's leave, with no special cause named; and in 1354 the then Rector, Thomas Whitecrofte, was also allowed a year off that he might attend on the King's service. "xxiv die Sept., A. 1354, apud Suthwerk dedit dominus Episcopus, etc., Thomæ de Whitecrofte Rectori Ecclesia de Hanytone [licentiam] insistendi per annum a dato dictæ diei xxiv continue numorandum obsequiis Domini Regis Angliæ, et per idem tempus fructus et proventum Ecclesiæ prædictæ aliquibus personis ydoneis concedenti ad ^{tenorem} ^{is} ^{se} licentiam specialem provisam, etc." (Edington 83^r.)¹

1550. GALFRIDUS ELLIS, Clericus.

On these somewhat fragmentary entries there are one or two remarks to be made. Thus in 1305 John of Schorstone was appointed, as the See of Winchester was vacant by the death of John of Pontoise, by "the most excellent Prince our Lord Edward [II], illustrious King of England." The resignation of Thomas Whitecroft in 1359 is said to have been made into the hands of John Beautree, public Notary, and Master Thomas Biham, the Bishop's Chancellor. Thomas Pentilowe and Richard Colpert were called in to witness to it (Edington I, 97 v.).

The last on the list, Geoffrey Ellis, appointed in the reign of Edward VI, in 1550, was presented by Thomas Somerset, gent., John Davy and John Lloyde "veros et indubitatos ejusdem ecclesiæ patronos, etc," a change which is not explained. The benefice is now in the gift of the Lord Chancellor.

Mr. Thompson, the present Rector of Hannington, tells me that close to the church stands the old Manor House, at which, according to local tradition, the Courts used to be held; "but not within the memory of the oldest inhabitants."¹

At Hannington we find the Warham family, one of whose members, and the most distinguished of them, was Archbishop of Canterbury from January, 1504, to 1532. The Warhams were often named foremen of the juries, and divide that honour with the Withers.² They were also considerable holders of land in the parish. Thus, on the Roll of 1463 we find that Robert Warham took up the whole pasture of the Lord of the Manor called Sherdowne, 25 acres in extent, with Burghfelde also and Barelond (quantities not named), on a lease for 20 years, on payment of 40s. a year, with a fine of two capons at the granting of the concession.

In Hannington parish there is standing to this day a house called Warham cottage, in which, according to local tradition, the Archbishop was born about 1450. He is also claimed for the ancient house and tower at Malshanger, in Church Oakley parish. There he appears to have been brought up, and thence was sent to Wykeham's College at Winchester, and afterwards in due course to New College at Oxford. Like so many intelligent young men of the time, in England or abroad, he saw that the road to distinction lay not through theology, but through scholarship

Hannynghton —Redditus assisæ	1	4	9
Redditus customarie tenentium ...	4	9	1

making a total of £12. 3s. This is given as among the sources of income then belonging to Southwick Priory, not far from Portchester, Hants.

² In a Wootton Roll of 1489 we find Robert Warham, Nicholas Warham, and Thomas Wither, named together.

and law ; and so he became a diligent legal student. He practised in the Court of Arches, and was known to Archbishop Morton, who commended him, as a useful person, not too original or clever, to King Henry VII. And so he "rose to high place, not from any transcendent merits, but from an absence of disqualifications and faults. . . . He was moderate in intellect and character. . . . a man of second-rate abilities." Such is Dean Hook's verdict on him in his Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury. He was a reformer on a timid scale, who ruled over the English Church with gentleness and some pliability of character, which was seen when he came into contact with that vigorous prelate, the man of his times, Cardinal Wolsey. He was always attached to his native Hampshire, and left behind him tokens of his good will in the screens and stained glass he gave to his churches, in hangings for the Hall of Winchester College, and books on Church Music for the College Library. It is no part of the work of this volume to trace the course of his life, or the tenour of his long Archiepiscopate. He was about 51 years of age and already a man of repute in Church and State when in 1501, 12 January, 16th of Henry VII (according to a deed in the Muniment Room of Magdalen College, Oxford), a lease was granted "from the President and Scholars of Magdalen College to the venerable man, William Warham, clerk, of all their messuages, lands, tenements, etc., in the parish of Wotton St. Lawrence called Skyrys (Scures), which John Aliffe lately held ; to hold for the term of ten years at an annual rent of 66s. 8d." It must, therefore, have been a property of some considerable size. And in Hannington itself we again meet the Archbishop in connexion with the Ayliffes, in the matter of tenure of land. "1517. Item, Thomas Ludlodge, qui de domino tenuit libere unam hidam terræ et quandam pasturam vocatam Rowdowne cum suis pertinentiis in Hanyton pro redditu per annum de xxiijs., dictas terras et tenementa alienavit Ricardo Aylyffe et aliis ad usum Reverendissimi in Christo patris Domini Domini Willelmi permissione divina Cantuarensis Archiepiscopi et hæredum suorum.”¹ From which it appears clearly that the Archbishop was anxious still further to strengthen the position of his family in Hanyton, and to secure them as large occupiers under the Monastery.

There is yet another trace of the Archbishop's affection for this district in the oaken screen in Baghurst Church, which was erected at his charges. He is said to have also given a similar screen to Church Oakley; when the chancel of that Church was rebuilt in 1866 or thereabouts, this admirable relic of the Archbishop was swept away by the architect and “restorer,” ill-omened name, of the Church. There still remain the arms of the Warham family impaled with those of Canterbury over the west door of that Church; they form an interesting reminiscence of the Archbishop's connection with Malshanger, where he undoubtedly spent some time in these days. He placed good recumbent effigies of his father and mother in the Church. There is also to be seen there in one of the lights some painted glass of the period, representing the Archbishop himself, with his coat of arms, and those of Canterbury beneath: it was happily lost for a long period, and discovered, when it was safe to find valuable antiquities, about twenty years ago, in a loft at Wootton St. Lawrence. The incumbent gave it to Mr. W. Wyndham Portal, of Malshanger, who gave it to Oakley Church.²

The Rolls give us just one touch of lawlessness and

sheep stealing at Hannington. In 1531 the Tything presents William Sylvester of Hannington, because, on this side of the Corpus Christi Festival, "felonice intravit tene-mentum Henrici Mayre apud Woonstone cum baculis et cultellis contra pacem Domini Regis, et ibidem cepit vj multones furtive et abduxit usque Hanyton in franchisesiam Domini Prioris: ideo præceptum Decenniae ibidem prædictos multones seisure ad usum dicti Domini Prioris."¹

As was the case at Wootton, a considerable portion of the Hannington Estate was well wooded. In the report of 1667 the church woods alone in this parish are given as:—

Great Coppice	30	acres
Longham Coppice	16	"
Hogstie Coppice...	7	"
Ragged Coppice...	10	"
Bushy Coppice	12	"
Lipcroft Coppice (distant from the rest)			7½	"

Making a total of Cathedral woodlands of 82½ acres

There is still a wood called "Dean's Wood" in the parish. The estate was much valued for its fine timber; chiefly of oak and ash.

In this parish were both Freemantle Farm, which is sometimes spoken of as an independent Manor, and Ibworth (which may perhaps mean "Ebba's property") a small hamlet. There is a barrow on the Freemantle Farm, telling of early inhabitants of the district, and through it runs the Roman road from Winchester to Silchester.

Lastly, we arrive at Baghurst (or Baughurst as it is now improperly written²), a village about seven miles

¹ "Feloniously entered the holding of Henry Mayre at Wonston with staves and knives, against the King's peace, and there stole six sheep, and drove them to Hanyton into the franchise of the Lord Prior; the Tything is therefore ordered to seize the said sheep for the use of the said Lord Prior."

² The name Baghurst, differently spelt as Baggehurst, Baggehirste, etc., never had a z in it, though the local pronunciation of the word appears to have always been broad. In the year 1842 (as is shewn by the Parish Registers), there came north-west from Basingstoke, and the last of the Manors included under Manydown. It came in late, apparently, though it had long belonged to the Prior and Convent of St. Swithun; for it is not named in these Rolls till the year 1462, when Hugh Dene, rent collector there, sends in his account to Manydown Manor House. This connection with Manydown was severed when Parliament resumed the estates of Deans and Chapters in 1649, so that it was under Manydown for less than two centuries.

There are several deeds relating to Baghurst in the Cathedral Archives; three of them, as containing matter of some little interest, are printed here in full. They shew that though the Rolls do not begin till the fifteenth century, the Manor was in the hands of the Prior and Convent long before that time.

The first of them is an agreement after dispute between the Prior and Convent of St. Swithun and William Hachard of Tadley and Ysabella his wife. The Convent bought up their claims and rights in Baghurst for ten marks of sterling money of England, together with four quarters of wheat and three of barley. This document is dated proximately by the name of the then Prior, Andrew of London, A.D. 1256-1261. It is in Vol. I of the Archives, p. 1, No. 2.

To all, etc. William Hachard of Tadley, Knight, and Ysabella his wife, greeting. Be it known to you one and all that whereas there has been strife between Andrew, D. G. Prior of St. Swithun's and the Convent there of the one side, and me and Ysabella my wife of the other side, concerning a certain Common of pasture in the lands of the said Prior and Convent and their men at Baghurst,—On the intervention of common friends this strife was appeased, viz., on the terms that I William Hachard, and Ysabella my wife have handed over and quit-claimed, for ourselves and heirs, to the Prior and Convent and their successors in their Church of St. Swithun of Winchester the whole right and claim we had or anyhow could have had to lands pastures ingress and egress and commons of the said Prior and Convent and their men at Baghurst, without any claim or reservation of ourselves or our heirs for ever. And for this our cession and quit-claim the said Prior and Convent have given us by the hands of Ralph Russell Monk, and William of Faukham, Seneschal, ten marks of good and lawful money sterling, and four quarters of wheat, and three of barley ; and should it happen that the Prior and Convent or their successors were hereafter impleaded by any for the said pasture and Common, by pretext whereof they were to lose the said pasture and Common, then we are bounden, and desire to be bounden for selves and heirs, to restore the said ten marks of silver, with all the corn aforesaid, to the Prior and Convent and their successors. Moreover we have granted and bona fide promised that whenever the Prior and Convent or their attornies may desire to enrol this cession and quit-claim in the King's Court or otherwise to affirm it,—I and my wife are bound to be at their suit, at their expense, until the said business, as aforesaid, is conveniently completed. And to the faithful and honest observance of all the above written matters we have bound ourselves with pledged faith and taken oath: and we have also submitted ourselves and our heirs to the distraint and control of the Seneschal of the Bishopric of Winchester for the time being, or to his attorney, whom he may have deputed for this purpose, that he may distrain on us and our heirs in our lands and chattels wheresoever found, until full satisfaction be done in the aforesaid matters in all things as is above written to the said Prior and Convent and their successors; we renouncing all suit, cavil, and above all, all royal prohibition.

In witness whereof etc.

There is also a Baghurst deed of the time of Prior Ralph (i.e. Ralph Russell, A.D. 1262–1265) in which Peter de la Forde gives up his claims on the lands etc. of the Prior and Convent on receipt of 20s. from them. So that about this time the Monastery must have been vigilant in enforcing its rights in these parts. There is also a similar deed in Prior Ralph's time, in the form of a release from Adam of Pember to the Prior and Convent of his claim to common of Pasture in Baghurst.

The deed here given comes from Vol. I of the Cathedral Archives, p. 12, No. 37. It is interesting to see how the scribe filled out the last line with the "et multis aliis" stretched out all across it.

To all, etc. Robert of Finlyhe greeting, etc. [I have granted] for me and my heirs and assigns to my Lord Valentine Prior of St. Swithun's and the Convent there [the whole right and claim] I have had or could have in the purprestures (or encroachments) of Hynewode and Felyhurst, and in all other places in Bagehurst with resignation also of that whole Common, pasture in whatsoever places pertaining to the [hamlet] of Ibew[orth]. [For the which] resignation and quit claim the said Prior and Convent have given me a certain [And that this] resignation and quit claim may remain ratified and stable for ever Witnesses . . , etc.

The other deed, that of Adam of Pember, is in terms almost identical with the two preceding documents, and need not be also translated into English.

I have learnt, through the kindness of the Rev. W. Marriner, Rector of Baghurst, that there is still a "Causey" and a "Causey Farm" in that parish, in the marshy lands which form the head waters of the Loddon and the Kennet. This Causeway was constructed along the swampy piece of road, some 200 years ago, to enable the inhabitants to get to Church without hindrance from the waters. The labourers on this farm say that the road would be again flooded, were the ditches not kept clear and open.

There seems to have been much woodland at Baghurst as well as on the other limbs of this manor. The name itself indicates it. Whatever "Bagge" may signify (possibly = back, a place with a woodland behind ; or = a badger) the "hurst" is undoubtedly a piece of land covered with brush-wood and thickets.¹ There was also plenty of water there at times, as the Court Rolls show. Thus in 1451 they present "quod via equina et pedalis inter Foxcote et Baghurst supereffluitur per inundationem aquæ supervenientis in defectu exaltationis ejusdem bis ad nocumentum patriæ et transiuntium ; in defectu totius decenniae (vj*d.*) ibidem— Ideo ipsi in misericordia."² "Item, quod pons pedalis vocatus Fordemedede jacet defectivus et irreparatus ad nocumentum patriæ et transiuntium." A foot-bridge and a roadway which had to be raised above the water level in flood time would be a matter for the whole tything, which was bound to put them to rights, and to see that no damage happened to the district (patria) from it. Again in 1456 the King's way called Church Lane and Andrew's Lane was flooded for lack of a proper ditch. In 1523 and 1530 the water again proved troublesome. In the former year John Harth and John Faythfulle were ordered "sufficienter facere unam portam aquaticam in Stonylande et Feythfullyslande, et committere aquam extra venellam apud Jakemore." And in 1530 the whole Tything was bidden to make good the bridge there, called the Stock-bridge. Probably, the following entry refers to the same district :—"Robertus Fowler permittit fossam suam apud Redyll-Crosse fore mescuratam (=minus curatam, neglected) per quod via regia ibidem infunderetur ad commune nocumentum. Ideo in misericordia."

² "The horse-path and footway between Foxcote and Baghurst has twice been overflowed by inundation of water coming on it, for want of being raised above the level, to the detriment of the district and the passers by ; by default of the whole Tything (6*d.*) : therefore they were amerced. Also that the foot-bridge called Fordemedede is defective and unrepaired, to the detriment of the district and passers by." Foxcote still survives in Fossgate Farm ; it was no doubt a cot-holding on the Fossa, the Roman road running S. W. from Silchester through the place.

Unlike the rest of the manor, which was almost entirely devoid of water, being high up on the rolling downs, Baghurst lay quite low on the northern edge of the county, some miles away from the local centre Basingstoke. In-hurst or Imhurst, which is often mentioned in these rolls, is a part of Baghurst, actually running along the county boundary.

The Rolls do not offer many special points of interest respecting Baghurst. In 1452, John Pynder (or Poynder) would not let the Lord's sheep pass through the Lord's wood of "Senget," or "Sandgate," "et ipsas fugavit," scattered them away, and was amerced therefor in sixpence. And a very few years later, in 1457, we find the Tything taking vigorous steps to put down a disreputable and disorderly woman. "Item, quod Benedicta, uxor Thomæ Scribe (? Snibe) est communis meretrix et pacis Domini Regis perturbatrix, ac tenet certum lupanar in domo dicti Thomæ viri sui in grave nocumentum et magnam perturbationem omnium vicinorum suorum. Ideo in misericordia"; and a man is also fined on the same Roll for frequenting the house. The moral supervision of the parish was by no means neglected in those days; which, so far, may serve as an example to people of a much later and more "civilised" era.

Two notices remain to be recorded; both of them relating to the Rectors of the Parish. 1. In 1452, the Tything presents that Thomas [Merlawe], Rector, had neglected to repair his premises, "permittit," says the Roll, "unam Gatehouse et unam aliam domum super tenuram suam esse ruinosas"; and in defiance of his "cloth," the Rector is duly fined.

2. In the other case the Rector seems to have been very hardly used. It runs thus:—

1498. "Johannes Warde de Brambley, yeman, 10^o die Aprilis ultimo præterito infra franchisesias et libertates Domini apud Baghurst . . . in nocte ad x^{am} horam venit et domum Johannis Frebuca (?) Rectoris ibidem fregit et intravit et dictum Johannem Frebuca ibidem verberavit et inarretivit (?) ut de vita sua desperabatur, et tunc et ibidem dictum Rectorem pro securitate pacis attachiavit et unam hangor percepit¹ de bonis et catallis prædicti Rectoris infra domum prædictam cepit et abcarriavit. Ideo in misericordia.²

To beat the Rector to within an inch of his life, and then to arrest him in order to keep the King's peace, seems very hard on the poor priest.

It remains for me now only to subjoin the list of Rectors of Baghurst, so far as I have been able to ascertain them from the Episcopal Registers and the Manydown Rolls.

² 1498. John Ward of Brambley, yeoman, on April 10th last past came by night, at ten o'clock, within the franchises and liberties of the Lord at Baghurst, and broke into and entered the house of John Frebuca, Rector there, and beat and tied up the said John Frebuca, so that his life was despaired of, and then and there attached the said Rector for the keeping of the peace, and took a "hangor" . . . of the goods and chattels of the said Rector within his house and carried it away. Therefore he is amerced.

² Bishop Robert "appears to have been consecrated to Emly for service in England when the see was already occupied in Ireland! but I suppose nobody knew or cared. There were two Roberts, both Franciscans, nominated, or appointed by the Pope soon after 1422, Robert Windele, and Robert Postland, and also two Augustinians. None of them got the income, and so, I suppose, 15⁴⁹/₅₀. RADULPHUS BIRD, Clericus, presented by Canon J. Story.

1558. "SIR RAUFE BIRD" is "parson of Bagorste."

The benefice was given in rapid succession to the friends and favourites of the Bishops, without much regard to the settled interests of the inhabitants. There are one or two entries in the Episcopal Registers, which may be recorded here.

Thus in Bishop Asser's Register (f. 26 r.), Roger of Chapmanneforde, Rector of Baghurst, received leave of absence for a year to study at some University, and so for the time to be excused from proceeding to further Orders, he being only a Subdeacon at the time. And in Bishop Stratford's Register (f. 95 r.) is a long entry of a peculiar kind. 1324. "In Dei nomine, Amen. Ego Willelmus de Leobury de Wygornia, clericus, Rector Ecclesiæ de D . . . Avenyngge, Wygorniensis Diocesis, ecclesiam de Baggehirste vestrorum patronatus et diocesis, quam aliquamdiu declined the dignity, the revenues being paid for nine years, at that time, into the Exchequer. Then in 1431 Thomas Burgh at last was consecrated, and occupied the see till 1443. Nevertheless, a Robert, Bishop of Emly, is found acting as Suffragan of Norwich in 1424, and in 1441 Robert, Bishop of Emly, was instituted to the Vicarage of Littleton Drew in Wilts." This note is kindly contributed by the Rev. W. D. Macray, of the Bodleian Library, Oxford. Robert, Bishop of Emly, on whom Waynflete conferred the Rectory of Baghurst in 1451 (Waynflete, Register I, f. 39 v.), was consecrated to Emly in Ireland at some date between 1431 and 1444. It appears that in the latter year one Cornelius O'Cunlis was made Bishop of Emly, and was succeeded in 1448 by another Cornelius, C. O'Mullady: so that Bishop Robert must have been put out, we know not wherefore; and was doubtless glad to have the income accruing from a country living in Hants. The record shows how indifferent people were at that time about the Episcopal office. The Living was used as the stipend of the Bishop of Winchester's assistant Bishop. One does not know whether Robert of Emly ever lived at either Emly or Baghurst.

canonice optinui et possedi cum suis juribus et pertinentiis universis, quatenus de jure teneor et juxta veram formam et effectum novellæ Constitutionis execrabilis, in manus venerabilis patris Domini Johannis D.G. Wyntoniensis Episcopi re et verbo dimitto, salvo mihi jure benefico undecumque.”¹ So that it appears clear that Clerk William of Leobury, who was holding Baghurst with his Church of Avening in the Worcester Diocese, had been compelled to disgorge it, much to his anger, by the “Constitutio Execrabilis,” which forbade pluralities.

It is to be noted that, for some reason unknown, in 1550 Ralph Bird was presented to the Rectory of Baghurst by “the Venerable Master John Story, L.D.” as we learn from Bishop Gardiner’s Register.

The value of this Manor, all taken together, may be gathered from the following reprint from the “Book of Values.”²

² The Book of Values, printed in Vol. I, of the Hants Record Society, p. 84, was compiled about the year 1545.

It remains now for us only to print some information which bears on the feudal holding and tillage of land, and on the manner in which an estate was stocked. This is obtained from a very interesting Stock-book of the Convent's Manors, giving not only the sound stock, but also "the worthless (Kebbi) or damaged animals, and the lambs found thereon in the months of April and May 1390," i.e., the census was taken soon after lambing-time. This MS., so far as it deals with our Manors, is printed below. It is worth noticing that all the Manors mentioned in this Stock-book, nineteen in number, are spoken of as the Prior's, the heading being "Instaurum omne remanens in maneriis Prioris." This must however mean that they were the Manors of the Convent, as the names sufficiently show. There is no mention of Baghurst in the volume, which appears to be quite complete.

So that the total nett income from the Manor of Manydon was then £69. 17s. 5d.

It may here be added that from very early days the Rectory of Baghurst has been connected with the Hospital of St. Cross at Winchester. The Rector to this day pays a "pensio" of 5s. a year to the Hospital. The connexion between this Parish and St. Cross is first mentioned in a Papal Bull of 1187; also in a Charter of King Richard I of Sept. 1, 1189; and in a Bull of 1191 by Pope Celestine III. It is also mentioned in the Taxation of Pope Nicolas in 1291.

¹ A “Hampshire Hogg” is not a pig at all, but a young, as yet unshorn, sheep; the term is still common in the county; it means not a coarse brute, but a young simpleton.

The contrast between the large stock of cattle at Wootton, and the total absence of beasts at Hannington is very striking. It means that Hannington was mainly downland or woodland, with very little arable ground in the Manor.

The inhabitants of these villages were only too much regarded by their lords as mere machinery for the tillage of the soil. Roughly speaking, they did half their tillage for themselves and half for the master; half, that is, in the tributary land, and half in the Lord's domain. There was, of course, a growing tendency to get, if a man could, his messuage with land immediately around it, and so to become independent of the strip system, with its desultory farming, inconveniences from indolent neighbours, and frequent changes; still the older system in the main prevailed. In addition to the arable and pasture land of the domain, which was tilled by the "precarious" work of the tenants, as a feudal service, the Lord also had his own waste, and his own woods. Thus, in Wootton there was a "Vastum Domini, ubi quædam fabrica sita est," perhaps a place where they made tiles or bricks, or perhaps a carpenter's shop. The "bene-work" of the Villcins or "Borderers" (who were cot-holders who had no strips in the common fields) was closely supervised from the yoking-to of the plough oxen at daybreak, to their unyoking in the evening: so that the labourers felt that the master's eye was ever on them; for half their days they must have ceased to have any personal interest in the work on which they were engaged.

All through the period covered by these Rolls we find evidence of the ancient cultivation in common, which has in our day shrunk to the joint-ownership of the village green. In 1379 we have the tallage "bondorum in comuni" in Wootton; i.e., their taxation for their common fields. On this Common land they could, according to their standing and interest in the parish, put their animals to graze at will. Of this we have a curious instance in the case of the Rector of Baghurst, who shewed a very bad example of grasping at more than his fair share of the use of the Common lands. "Willelmus Smythson, Rector de Baghurst, superonerat communam cum bobus et equabus suis, ad nocumentum omnium ibidem inhabitantium"; and in spite of his cloth and position the Court punished him for this greedy misuse of the parish lands. Somewhat later (in 1478) the Rector of Hannington, John Williams, "fenced in eight acres of wood and arable land, separating them from the Communa of Hanyton called Westfield, whereby the tenants lost their common right therein, which they had exercised without hindrance from time immemorial."

There was also a distinct "terra nativorum," a portion of land belonging in common to the serfs; as to which I have no definite information, though it appears to have been quite different from the "Communes campi" above.

The inhabitants were worried by many services, many "precariæ," not only that of tilling the Lord's fields. Of these the most burdensome, it may be, was the "Average," or carrying service, "cum affro suo ducent bladum domini, caseum, et lanam," says one roll. And they were sufferers in many ways. They had to gather the Lord's nuts, or perhaps his walnuts, which were apparently a considerable crop, of which the failure from time to time is specially noted in the Rolls: e.g., "Hoc anno (1360) non fuerunt nuces." They had to "keep crows," "unius garcionis custodientis blada pro corvis in hieme." They could do hardly anything without leave: A man could not even cut down a tree on his land. Thus, in 1531 William Bystulle cut down one peartree and three ashes without leave on his own holding, and was fined for it. They could not sublet without permission and payment. Thus, in 1516 "Johannes Adene dat domino de recognitione xxd. pro isto anno pro licentia habendi unum subtenentem in messuagio et terris suis ibidem, sic quod faciat residentiam cum familia sua ad festum S. Michaelis quod sit in anno 1516 sub pæna forisfacturæ domino *xls.*¹

There was also an officer, whose name tells a melancholy tale of the unhealthy conditions of agriculture: in 1380 we find men entitled the "Cadaveratores," whose business it was to look into and report on the losses of cattle and sheep from murrain.

It may be interesting to note down the prices of the grain grown on the estates in 1498 and 1499, as they are set out in the Rolls. These prices would now be all regarded as high:—

In 1498—Frumentum	vs.
Ordeum	iijs.
Avenæ	ijs.

In 1499 at Wootton it was—

Frumentum	iijs. viijd.
Ordeum	ijs. viijd.
Avenæ	ijs.

While in Baghurst it was—

Frumentum	vs. iiijd.
Ordeum	ijs. iiijd.
Avenæ	ijs. ²

The Rolls also throw some light on the tight hand which the Convent kept over its Nativi.

¹ "John Adene gives to the Lord for recognisance 20d. for this year, for leave to have a subtenant in his messuage and lands there, provided that he resides with his household there at Michaelmas 1516, under pain of forfeiture to the Lord of 40s.

² There is recorded an interesting item, namely, that the lords were obliged to sell grain to their over-lord, the Crown, at two-thirds the market price. In 1338 the Convent sold the King twelve quarters of Oats at 16d. the quarter, while the rest of that year's growth was sold elsewhere at 24d.

I have just mentioned the "terra nativorum," and it is instructive to see in the Rolls how often the poor Nativus appears. He was the lowest class of labourer ; called a "native," because he must have been born on the estate ; unable to step out of the Manor without leave ; possessed of no rights, and, in fact, no property ; the ancestor of all that is degraded and down-trodden in the rural districts of England to this day.

No "native" could give his daughter in marriage without his Lord's leave. In 1402 Johanna, the daughter of William Rayner, married "sine licentia domini," and her misconduct made it necessary for the Lord to pull up the officials.¹ In the same year another had gone off without leave and was living at Thatcham ; he had to be recalled ; and a third was summoned before "the Lord Prior and his Council" at Winchester "ad essoniam," to exonerate himself from some burden, if he could.

At Hannington, in 1412, there is a curious entry on the recognisances of a Native. "De vid. de pretio unius ferri pedalis cum clavis de nativa recognitione Johannis Palmere, filii nuper Thomæ Palmere, pro licentia extra dominium Domini, dum Domino placuerit ;"² and similarly in 1462, Robert Goudenathe pays twopence "de nativa recognitione," "ut morare (sic) possit quo voluerit,"—"to live wherever he may desire."

Though the standing of a "Nativus" was thus servile, and opposed to all our notions as to the independence of Englishmen, it should not be forgotten that the monastic bodies were generally far less oppressive lords over the people than were the laymen. The Cathedral Enrolment Book, which runs from 1345 to 1496, shews clearly that St. Swithun's Priory was no exception to this rule. It contains a large number of manumissions of "natives," averaging about one a year during the whole period. It is interesting to note that they are most frequent in the latter part of the fifteenth century, when, as is obvious, there may have been many reasons why the monastery should show this favour to its serfs.

¹ We find a distraint on Robert Sawyer and . . . Cusemonide, lately the Servientes, and Robert Herwood, who were had up "ad respondendum Domino de maritagio Johannæ filiæ Willelmi Rayner, nativæ domini."

² "By 6*d.*, the price of an iron fetter with keys, the acknowledgment of the "native" condition of John Palmere, son of the late Thomas Palmere, for leave to be without the Lord's domain, so long as the Lord may please."

Through the kindness of the Rev. F. T. Madge, the Librarian of the Cathedral, I am able here to print an example of the form in which manumissions took place. It will be seen that the reason for this act of grace is not given; nor do the monks as a rule specify their reasons.

Of other tenant-liabilities we have many illustrations. The "Heriots" or death-duties were among the most directly oppressive. A "Heriot" is some living animal, usually the best horse or cow on a holding, which was claimed by the Lord on the tenant's death. A heriot (A.S. heregeatu, military apparel or equipment) was, in principle, the rendering back to the Lord the armour and trappings which a tenant was supposed to have received from his Lord on being admitted to his holding. When he died, his heir was bound to return these to the Lord; and, as a rule, received them back again on being himself invested in his predecessor's room. It will be seen from the following quotation that the idea of military equipment, and service in the field survived long after the early days in which the tenants were called to appear in arms. In 1328 the Convent of St. Swithun claimed and got, as heriot, a horse with saddle, bridle, and sword, the true gear of war, as well as a heifer. And, on the other hand, when lands were let to women, no heriot could be levied; thus we find in 1478 that at Upper Wootton, a Messuage and Virgate fell in to the Convent on the tenant's death, but no heriot: "quia mulier tenens in viduitate non herietatur;" she could not fight, and was therefore free from the burdens of warlike equipment. By degrees, as life became more settled, the fighting aspect of this duty passed out of sight; and a heriot was commuted into the best living animal on the farm. This ancient claim still subsists in some parts of England. The original burden was no hardship; the lord had provided the clothing and trappings of war, just as he still dresses his soldiery in uniform; and this, on the tenant's death, was handed back to him; afterwards, when the heriot came to be simply a tax of the best beast, the poor widow or heirs of the dead tenant thought it a real hardship to have to surrender the very animal on which the tillage of the soil and the future livelihood of the survivors largely depended. They sometimes, like the millionaires of to-day, endeavoured to escape the burden by getting rid of their property in their life-time. Thus, on one holding we are told that "nichil provenit domino de Herietto, quia non habuit aliquod animal vivum."

In those days of open fields, and of ownership far less individualised than it is now, it was necessary to make careful provision for escaped or strayed animals, which might do great mischief to the crops, unless they were speedily driven off and shut up. Hence the ancient Pound. In the fifteenth century, strays were entrusted to the care of some parish official. In our Rolls we find the Vicar and the Firmarian both reported as holding strays in hand. In 1489 the Vicar of Wootton had in his custody a white sheep with her lamb, and the Firmarian reported that he also had charge of a strayed sheep. These animals were thus kept by the person in charge of them, until their rightful owner came, claimed them, paid the necessary expenses for damage done, trouble taken, fodder consumed, and carried them away. If he failed to do so within a year and a day, the animal was forfeited to the Lord of the Manor.

We have already discussed the action of the local Courts, and the varied misdemeanours of the inhabitants of our villages. It will be enough here to jot down at random a few more examples of these, whether they are transgressions of pastureland, or of standing corn, or of woodlands; or infringements of assize of bread or beer; or sheep stealing, or poaching, or removal of boundaries, or theft, as when Stephen le Wayte stole a man's shirt, worth eightpence, and was fined six shillings for the misde-meanour. There is a curious case, early in the sixteenth century, when John Fletcher of Foscote (a farm on the ancient Portway between Sarum and Silchester), a husbandman, "injuste venit infra dominium Domini ibidem, viz., infra terram Willelmi Appulton in Foscotefelde, et xx carectatas calcis ibidem fodit et abcaravit";¹ which was stealing on a fairly large scale.

Lastly, there were serious offences against morals and the person; as when in 1453 Thomas Peverelle, one of a turbulent family, attacked his father Robert with a "mortiferium" (a "death-dealer," perhaps a kind of blunderbuss; Ducange does not know the word): In 1516 one Richard Soper attacked Stephen Knight with an "armisardium," and drew blood. This weapon was probably some kind of dart or javelin.

In these pages I have tried to get a glimpse into the practical working of village life in England in the later middle ages. The first impression is one of a general dead-level of dulness and depression, where there were no classes of society between the working man who tilled the soil, and the non-resident landlord. There is here little sign of a "merrie England"; there was little to interest or exhilarate a man in those days, and plenty to teach him that his life was devoid of outlet; his prospects scarce more than those of a simple animal existence. There is no feeling of possible motion, change, elevation: there can be no career, no advance, save now and then for some bright youth, who becomes a Churchman. In that estate, almost if not quite alone, men not noble could find an opening into the larger world. Of this possibility successfully used, the rise of William Warham from the condition of a farmer's son on the Manydown estate to that of Archbishop of Canterbury is a rare and brilliant example. For the rest of mankind there was no variety ; no news, no books, no dealings with other places, no change of scene or even of dress ; no village school, no doorway opening towards the enchanted world of knowledge ; no strong convictions in religion, save in the reposeful mysteries of simple devotion which has to ask no questions. A daily task, closely watched by a task-master, in a never-changing routine of cultivation ; food the roughest and most rudimentary, almost without vegetables or any variety ; and, at best, a dull and humble acquiescence in the conditions of semi-servile existence. This was the rustic's life, in that state of life to which he was called ; a monotony broken only from time to time by the trivial incidents of daily life, or by the feudal courts and their penalties, by bad seasons bringing famine in their train, or by the still more ominous shadow of the pestilence, until that welcome visitor, the angel of death, bade the tired labourer at last lay down his tools, and follow to his reward.

We have our evils to-day, many and great, in this busy modern England, our faults and failings, and failures and catastrophes ; yet man for man, and day for day, we can see plainly that the race has risen to a higher level, and that the average of our civilised life, whether in the domestic or the social sphere of it, is far better than it was. The interests of the humblest among us are infinitely enlarged ; the world around us has expanded ; the brotherhood of the race, the harmonies or discords of the nations, the grasp of mental interests, the vast growth of our religious activities ; all these things have combined to give to our times a new and permanent advance in vigour and power. We are being fitted to face the many swift and startling movements, and the oft-recurring crises of modern society. We still endeavour, in all the incidents of our daily life, as well as in all the changes of our career, to look up to our Heavenly Father. Ours may not be the "ages of faith," yet God is as near as ever He was ; and the sense of His presence will surely help us to advance still further the welfare of our brethren and our country in the difficult days before us.

CATALOGUE OF MSS.

PRESENTED TO THE CATHEDRAL LIBRARY

BY THE REV. R. F. BIGG-WITHER, M.A.,

RECTOR OF WORTING, HANTS.

I.—COMPOTUS ROLLS OF WOOTTON.

1. WOTTONE. Compotus ibidem A.D. 1338, et confirmationis Domini Alexandri Prioris xj^{mo}. 8ft. 9in. by 10 $\frac{3}{4}$ in.
[Alexander Heriard was Prior of St. Swithun's, Winchester, from A.D. 1328 to 1349. Bp. Milner does not give the date of his confirmation, which is first learnt from this document.]
- (In tergo) WOTTONE. Exitus grangiæ ibidem A.D. 1338.
[This MS. has suffered much from damp.]
2. WOTTONE. Compotus ibidem A.D. 1352, et confirmationis Domini J. Prioris quarto. 5ft. 11in. by 11in.
[Prior John III, or of Merlawe, was Prior from 1349 to 1361. His name stands about half way up the List of Monks in 1325. He filled the offices of Hordarian and Receiver under his predecessor Alexander.]
- (A tergo) WOTTONE. Exitus grangiæ ibidem anno 52.
3. WOTTONE. Compotus ibidem A.D. 1354, et confirmationis Domini Johannis Prioris sexto. (A tergo) WOTTONE. Exitus grangiæ ibidem A.D. 1354. 4ft. 9in. by 10 $\frac{3}{4}$ in.
4. WOTTONE. Compotus ibidem A.D. 1358, et confirmationis Domini Johannis Prioris [x^{mo}]. (A tergo) Exitus grangiæ ibidem. 5ft. by 10 $\frac{1}{2}$ in.
[This MS. has suffered greatly from damp.]
5. WOTTONE. Compotus ibidem A.D. 1360, et confirmationis Domini Johannis Prioris xvj^o. (A tergo) Exitus grangiæ ibidem. 5ft. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ in. by 11in.
On a slip of parchment attached to the foot of this Roll :
WOTTONE. Defectus redditus ibidem a. 60. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$ in. by 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ in.
6. WOTTONE. Compotus ibidem A.D. 1364, et confirmationis Domini Hugonis Prioris iiij^o. (A tergo) Exitus grangiæ ibidem. 5ft. 11in. by 10 $\frac{3}{4}$ in.
At the foot is a small Roll attached : De Terris et Tenementis existentibus in manus Domini in defectu Redditus hoc anno, 1364. 16in. by 7 $\frac{3}{4}$ in.
[William IV, surnamed Thudden, was chosen to succeed John of Merlawe in 1361, but the Bishop invalidated the election, because it was made without his participation; Hugh II, or de Basyng, was voted into his place by the forty-two monks of whom the convent then subsisted. 1361-1384.]
[This MS. has been written with bad ink, which has faded much.
The exitus grangiæ has almost entirely vanished.]

7. WOTTONE. Compotus Radulphi le Wayte, Servientis ibidem A.D. 1368, et confirmationis Domini Hugonis Prioris vij^{mo}. (A tergo) Exitus grangiæ ibidem. 6ft. 2in. by 11in.
[I know nothing of Ralph le Wayte, Serjeant of the Manor. There were several Waytes connected with the Cathedral Monastery about this time, but no Ralph.]
8. WOTTONE. Compotus Rad. le Wayte, Servientis ibidem A.D. 1369, et confirmationis Domini Hugonis Prioris viij^o. (A tergo) Exitus grangiæ ibidem. 6ft. 4in. by 11in.
9. WOTTONE. Compotus ibidem A.D. 1371, et confirmationis Domini Hugonis Prioris x^{mo}. (A tergo) Exitus grangiæ ibidem. 9ft. 0½in. by 10¾in.
[Has suffered considerably from damp.]
10. WOTTONE. Compotus ibidem A.D. 1373, et confirmationis Domini Hugonis Prioris xij^o. (A tergo) Exitus grangiæ ibidem. 8ft. 9in. by 10½in.
11. WOTTONE. Compotus ibidem A.D. 1377, et confirmationis Domini Hugonis Prioris xvj^o. (A tergo) Exitus grangiæ ibidem. 6ft. 8in. by 10½in.
12. WOTTONE. Compotus ibidem A.D. 1378, et confirmationis Domini Hugonis Prioris xvij^o. (A tergo) Exitus grangiæ ibidem. 8ft. 1in. by 10⅝in.
13. WOTTONE. Compotus ibidem A.D. 1381, et confirmationis Domini Hugonis Prioris xx^o. (A tergo) Exitus grangiæ ibidem. 6ft. 2½in. by 10¼in.
14. WOTTONE. Compotus ibidem A.D. 1383, et confirmationis Domini Hugonis Prioris vicesimo secundo. (A tergo) Exitus grangiæ ibidem. 7ft. 2in. by 11½in.
15. WOTTONE. Compotus ibidem A.D. 1385, et confirmationis Domini Roberti Prioris primo. (A tergo) Exitus grangiæ ibidem. 7ft. 4in. by 10¾in.
[Prior Robert Rudborne, S. T. P., was elected in 1384 and died 1394.]
16. WOTTONE. Compotus ibidem A.D. 1392, et confirmationis Domini Roberti Prioris octavo. (A tergo) Exitus grangiæ ibidem. 8ft. 8½in. by 11¼in.
[A fine MS.]

17. WOTTONE. Compotus ibidem A.D. 1393, et confirmationis Domini Roberti Prioris nono. (A tergo) Exitus grangiæ ibidem. 9ft. by 11in.

[In parts in a very tender state.]

18. [WOTTONE.] Compotus ibidem A.D. 1398, et confirmationis Domini Thomæ Prioris quarto. (A tergo) Exitus grangiæ ibidem. 8ft. by 11in.

[Thomas Nevyle, S.T.P., the friend and helper of Bishop William of Wykeham, became Prior in 1394. The date of his death appears to be unknown.]

II.—COURT ROLLS.

19. WUTTONE. Curia ibidem tenta per Fratrem J. de Dunketone Receptorem die Veneris proxima ante festum Sancti Edmundi Regis, A.D. 1300. 2ft. 3in. by $8\frac{1}{2}$ in.

WOTTONE. Curia de Hockeday ibidem tenta die Lunæ proxima post festum Ascensionis Domini, A.D. 1301.

[Brother John of Dunketone was Hordarian at St. Swithun's in 1327. On the Roll of 1325 he stands second in the list, and must by that time have been an elderly man.]

Præsentatum est quod Thomas Specir filius Johannis Sumer de Northokel fregit bercariam Ricardi de Scures et intravit et [necavit unam ovem matricem]¹ nigram et pellem ovis asportavit et similiter duos agnos et ibidem necavit et ipsos asportavit, et in eadem bercaria inventus fuit unus [cani]pul² per quem escoriaverat dictos agnos. Et similiter est culpabilis de aliis latrociniiis.

Burgagium oneratur quod attachietur si potest inveniri infra libertatem Domini.

Omnes etiam liberi tenentes præsentant pro eorum sacramento quod prædictus Thomas inculpabilis est de omnibus prædictis prout præsentatus per decenarios.

§ Summa lvs. et xij*d*. de redditu annuo.

At first it was a Court only. In 1365 we have "Curia cum Visu franciplegii"³; in 1379 and 1380 the "Visus" appears to be dropped; in 1400 it is restored, and so continues. These Court Rolls are headed Wottone down to 1415; but the next, in 1430, is Manydowne; and the Manydowne Manor embraces Hanytone, Wottone, and Baghurst. In 1471 it is "Curia cum visu f. p.," but in 1478 "Visus franci-plegii cum Curia," and continues in this form to the end.

¹ The "Kingale" was apparently a village feast; cp. "bride-ale." The word is found in similar sense in the Churchwarden's Accounts of Andover, Hants, for 1470-73. Nares' Glossary gives us "King-game," the pageant of the three Kings, a kind of miracle-play or sport held by the parish officers in summer-time, and this was probably the same thing.

IX.—DOCUMENTS CONNECTED WITH THE SURRENDER OF
THE MANOR OF MANYDOWN IN 1649.

At the time of the Commonwealth the lands of the Dean and Chapter passed into the hands of the Commissioners ; and they entered into negotiations with Mr. William Wither, who was prepared to give a good sum for the Manydown property. The assent of the customary and immediate tenants was given in the document herewith printed, in which, it will be seen, the tenants expressed their readiness to pass from a Capitular to a lay lord.
